WHY HE KEPT THE OATS.

The Yankee Elevator Man Was Too Slow of Speech for the Farmer.

It was Saturday—a pleasant Saturday afternoon in a small country town, writes Mr. Forrest Crissey in the Chicago Tribune. The oat crop was just coming in and a string of teams stood in line, taking their turns at unloading their oats at the only elevator in the town. It was run by a Yankee, whose personal characteristics were known to every man in the country around except a newcomer. The newcomer's load stood third from the last in the line. It was late when his turn came.

"What are you paying for oats today?" he inquired.

At this question the two men behind him heaved hopeless sighs and drove away in apparent disgust.

"Wall, now, I tell ye," said the Yankee, rubbing his pointed chin between his thumb and forefinger. "Ye see, a-h—ye know, a-h—ye're a stranger here, ain't ye?"

"Yes."

"Wall, I'll tell ye—ye see, a-h, we clean oats—an' oats ain't this year what they wuz last—got struck with the blight, ye see, but——"

"But what do you pay for o——?"

"Yes, yes—just as I wuz sayin'; Oats ain't No. 1 this year, an' the year before they lodged, an' the year before that they mildewed, an', jes' s'I told the feller that run the place you're on, the crop's ben a failure fur off-an'-on five——"

"But what will you pay for these o——?"

The stranger was not permitted to finish his question. The Yankee had shifted his quid, braced against the hay scales, and begun with fresh vigor: "Just as I wuz sayin'—we clean our oats an'——"

"For heaven's sake, man, how did you ever manage to propose to your wife?"

"Wall, now, I'll tell ye," began the Yankee, with a smile. "Ye see, a-h—ye know——"

"Yes; I've seen a good many Yankees, and I've known a good many slow-combustion liars, but I'll eat all the oats you ever told the price of if I ever saw such a one as you in all my days!"

With this he cut his team with his whip and started home with his load. The last thing he heard, as he drove away, was:

"Say, now—I'll tell ye——"

But he never did, and after that when the stranger heard a man begin a story with "Well, I'll tell you," he moved on.

Not Such a Great Danger.

General Greely, in his annual talk about the weather, gives some space to showing that tornadoes are not quite so bad as they are made out. For one thing he notes they are not so destructive to life as thunder storms, and quotes in support of this dictum the annual reports for eighteen years, which show 102 deaths annually from tornadoes, while in this present year just the same number was killed by lightning in the period from March to August, the latter list also being notoriously incomplete, especially in the Southern States. Rather more comforting, than this comparison of one large list of deaths with another still larger, are the conclusions that in no State may a destructive tornado be expected oftener than once in two years, and that the chance of personal injury or loss of property is really very small. He says that the published accounts are almost grossly exaggerated, and cites one case in which a month after the storm the loss of life was reported as 500, whereas it was really 115. He calls particular attention to the narrowly narrow path of the destructive tornadoes, those that work great damage.

The territory affected is usually short, as well as narrow, so that even if it were known that one would strike tomorrow in a certain State the chance of danger to any particular inhabitant would be exceedingly small. The report does not go into figures on this point, but here is an illustration: Take for instance, the State of Kansas and assume a tornado which follows the surface for a mile and cuts a path two hundred feet wide. This is a big one. The State contains 81,318 square miles, and the area assumed as covered by the tornado is one-twenty-sixth of a mile. Consequently the chance of the tornado striking any particular spot of that area in the State would be about one in twenty millions. So much for the individual chances.

On the other hand the total damage in the country in a year is great. The record for eighteen years shows 2,000 tornadoes, or violent storms, which killed 1,071 people and destroyed $23,000,000 worth of property, while in the most violent class there were fifty-eight, which killed 755 people and destroyed property to the value of $11,894,700. Nervous readers will do well to fix their minds on the two points, of the very small number of deaths each year and the extreme improbability of a destructive tornado hitting any designated spot.—Hartford Courant.

Rheumatism

Is of two kinds, acute and chronic. The former is accompanied by high fever, and in the swollen joints there is intense pain, which often suddenly changes from one part of the body to another. Chronic rheumatism is without fever and not so severe, but more continuous, and liable to come on at every storm or after slight exposure. Rheumatism is known to be a disease of the blood and Hood's Sarsaparilla has had great success in curing it. This medicine possesses qualities which neutralize acidity and purify, enrich and vitalize the blood.

Sad But True.

Evening in Chicago.

The lake beating a murmurous tattoo on the lonely shore.

A great house in the silent street, with the wind howling outside.

The young Count of New York whispering sweet somethings to the lovely Lady Northside inside.

"Dear lady," he says in tremulous tones, "I have known you only a short time, but love is not a slave of time or circumstances, and, lady mine, I,—I"—he hesitated only an instant, "I would ask your hand."

She blushed and let her beautiful brown eyes fall.

He picked them up quickly and handed them to her, as she said:

"What you ask is very great, dear Reginald, and"—

But Reginald was gone.

And Lady Northside was conversing to herself.

On the outside the count halted.

"By Zucks!" he exclaimed in cold, mechanical tones, "she thought I was asking for her foot."

And the next moment he had disappeared in the gathering gloom.

Strange indeed that

A PLAIN THING like SAPOLIO should make everything so bright, but "A needle clothes others, and is itself naked." Try it in your next house-cleaning

What folly it would be to cut grass with a pair of scissors! Yet people do equally silly things every day. Modern progress has grown up from the hooked sickle to the swinging scythe and thence to the lawn mower. So don't use scissors!

But do you use SAPOLIO? If you don't you are as much behind the age as if you cut grass with a dinner knife. Once there were no soaps. Then one soap served all purposes. Now the sensible folk use one soap in the toilet, another in the tub, one soap in the stables, and SAPOLIO for all scouring and house-cleaning.
