All, heroes of the battle ! Hall, men who wore the shield ! Who nove the fail to riory on many a sanguine field: Who nove the flait to riory on many a sanguine field: We celebrate your victories and twine you greener bays. For peace has wound her gives round the prowns of sterner days; The splendor of your complexity casts a halo of er me land. And the hopes of lagrang ages quicken as they wordering stard; Though the slogen sounds no longer and the brazen tongues are sealed. There is proud acciaion to shout your mame, O men who wore the shield !

O. I see the boyish faces kindling with the breath of Spring. O, i see the boytsh faces similing with the breach of Spring. Turning form the method collars with the sturity rife-swing From the or facts pink with bossed is to the long and dusty way. Where the measure gais are growing and the lowish steps are sight. And the towish eyes are growing and the lowish steps are slight. And the townshe where his horse to gaze, for 'trea splen' id-light; And with unit runs has beeven's but with heaven's stars revealed. They mark the measures with their steps, the men who were the shall.

HEY are marching, proudly marching, but there's danger in the way, And the docts of war are growling and their reeking maws are wide; Lo, the videttes warn the pickets and the pickets warn the lines. And the docts of lines are growling and their reeking maws are wide; Lo, the videttes warn the pickets and the pickets warn the lines. And the long roll roars and rumbles through the soughing sentry place; Bat the boyish lips are fast and firm, their fealty is sealed. For heaven the fight whose cause is right, the men who were the shield.

The foreign ships occupied the center, the United States ves-sels on either side as an escort. As the line entered the Narrows a salute of 21 gone was fired from either shore. One of the great sights of the parade was a series of gigantic floats illustrating the remarkable progress in the art of ship building since the time Columbus discovered America. The parade contered and revolved round the foreign naval visitors, the war ships of France, Italy and Spain, suid a roar of cannon which scened to make the very island of Manhattan tremble. A fitting climax to this most successful pageant was the scene at the turning point at Riverside. It was nearly 3 p. m. when the Philadglphia, preceded by a cloud of the rankaupping, preceded by a cloud of turs and pleasure boats, stowed down in front of Riverside with the foreign warships and the rest of the naval escor well in line. The tide was beginning to turn and the gaily bedecked vessels swing around at will and indulged in all kinds of naval "horse play" while waiting the anneated "horse

At 3.35 n m the Naval Committee's hoat with the Vice President, Governor Flower and its other distinguished guests aboard, turned the buoy and possed the warships on its homeward trip. Then the signal to salute was given, and the Columbian naval pag ant closed with the echoes of the creat guins reverberating around the tomb of the silent Grant. silent Grant.

A sight fully as interesting as that of the vessels in line was presented by the im-mense crowd of srectators, at least a million being present. There were 10 miles of humanity on the shores. From the battery to Harlem was one solid mass of people. After the parade the parks and squares were illuminated with Chinese lanterns and colored lights, and there was another great pyrotecanic display on the Brooklyn bridge.
