

The Contentious Lip.
The compressed lip beloved by the novelist is a sign of weakness rather than strength. The strong man has every feature, every physical attribute under control. Assured of his men's obedience, the commanding officer does not habitually keep his lip muscles in a state of tension. Look at the sea captain, the most absolute monarch on earth. He carries authority and power in his face, but it resides in his eye and the confident assurance of his easily set mouth. Every spar, shaft, and muscle in his floating realm must obey him, and he knows it. This is probably a reason why the sea captains and the engine drivers show a certain similarity of type. The engine driver can make his captive giant, strong as ten thousand men, obey the pressure of his finger. His lips are usually calm, like those of the statues of the welder of thunderbolts on Olympus. Who ever saw a man commanding a man-of-war or driving a locomotive with the contentious lip of a school usher?

MANY elections are carried by stay-at-home voters.

Hard Times.
It is not merely the fact that a million men are said to be out of work with consequent loss of time, place and money, that makes the times seem so tough, but there are other aggravations superadded, growing out of the willful neglect of so many, that make the times seem hard, indeed. It better times were at hand and good places open to all that are now idle, there are thousands who would betotally unfit to go to work by reason of the neglect of some infirmity which totally unfits them to accept a proffered chance. What better opportunity could there be to get their physical condition in good shape than the enforced idleness gives them? To do so is making profit out of misfortune, not to do so is making hard times so much harder. It is poor logic to make anything bad grow worse, and it is no economy at all to save expense by sacrificing health. A man wants brawn, muscle and brain in as nearly a perfect condition as is possible, to gain a victory in the battle of life. It is mostly from a beginning in little things that the greater ones accumulate and finally overwhelm us. There is hardly one who labors with his muscles, from the skilled mechanic down to those who work with pick and shovel, but has some bodily ailment neglected. What costly trifling it is, looked at from this angle. For example, the bones, joints, ligaments, tendons, and muscles are all under constant strain from the nature and demands of their work. Aches and pains must ensue. These, neglected, soon reach the chronic stage of stiffened joints from contracted muscles. How many old mechanics have bent backs, and aches we know. This is simply a condition of neglected lumbago, which had it been treated in time could have been cured in ten minutes by St. Jacobs Oil. This is also true of all the minor ailments. How many certain a cure ought certainly to be in every workman's house to make hard times lighter.

250 TRIBESMEN KILLED
Particulars of the Bloody Battle on the Afghan Frontier.

An attack was made Sunday morning by Waziri tribesmen upon the camp of the escort of the political officer who is engaged in delimitation of the Waziristan-Punjab frontier, India. The escort, which was under the command of Col. A. H. Turner, had been awaiting the onset for an hour, armed and accoutred. The weather was bitterly cold. The Waziris crept up the ravines past the pickets and a fierce hand-to-hand encounter followed. The Goorkhas, who comprised the escort, behaved splendidly against the superior force. With a quarter of an hour the enemy broke and retired. The cavalry was then able to charge, not, however, before a heavy fire was poured into the camp by a body of Waziris supporting the attacking party.

The tribesmen were pursued several miles, and 250 of them killed. The British loss was Lieutenant P. J. F. Macaulay, 21 soldiers and 33 followers killed, including two native officers and a few officers and 32 men wounded. It is believed that the punishment inflicted was severe enough to deter the Waziris from further fighting.

A Sea Hare Captured.
A sea hare weighing 22 pounds, the first ever found on the coast of New Jersey, was caught at Cape May and sent to the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia. It is a rare species of mollusk, whose shell is rudimentary and internal, the body being protected by a fleshy lobe or flap on each side. The head has four tentacles. It feeds exclusively on marine vegetation. The sea hare in ancient times was supposed to be poisonous and to cause baldness to any one handling them, but scientists now say they are harmless.

EDUCATION IN GROWING THINGS

How Children Can Be Kept Interested by Well-Selected "Rubbish."

Give a little child congenial employment, and he will almost invariably be happy and good-natured. Toys alone are not all that he requires—his active little mind demands the stimulus of intelligent occupation, even at the early age of 3 or 4, and it behooves a mother who has the responsibility of his mental growth at heart to provide the wherewithal for development. There is something very touching and beautiful in seeing an intellectual woman of real ability eagerly interested in the rudiments for the sake of her little child, says the New York Tribune. At an al fresco tea in the Berkshires not long ago a well-known authoress commenced filling her pockets with "rubbish," as she laughingly called the collection she proposed to add to a trunk full of odds and ends which, as she explained, she intended taking back to town for occupation for her small boy during the winter. Dried mosses and curious insects, preserved in alcohol to examine with the microscope; pressed wild flowers and grasses for a herbarium, and various seeds from interesting plants to start in the spring, etc.

"You can make a lovely experiment with an acorn or chestnut," she said by way of illustration, "by suspending one by a thread within half an inch of the surface of the water contained in a hyacinth glass, and leaving it undisturbed. In a month or two it will throw a root into the water, and shoot upward a straight little stem, from which will develop tiny beautiful green leaves. You have no idea how such experiments delight very young children, and how it awakens their intelligence. Another interesting bit of growth for the nursery is to take one of these pine cones, place it in a wine glass half filled with water, and after it has imbibed the moisture for a few days sprinkle it with canary seed. In a week's time the seed will sprout, to the intense satisfaction of the tiny gardener. Or an old sponge may be kept wet and completely covered with living green. Object lessons such as these teach many things which the inquisitive intelligence of early childhood imbibes without effort, but which cannot fail to develop and enlarge the mind." Mothers who, like Martha, are careful about many things and worry perpetually over the physical well-being of their children should consider whether they are careful to supply nutriment to the brain as well as the body.

Is British Trade Prospering.
In an article under this head the London Spectator thus sums up the situation: "There seems to us to be, on the whole, little justification for either optimism or pessimism as regards trade prospects. The nation is doing a great trade—greater than with any other nation it has done before—but not so great in proportion to its rapidly increasing population. There is an immediate prospect of still further decline in the yield of our agriculture, and as yet no immediate prospect of a compensating rise in the producing powers of manufacture and trade. Still, such prospects are never visible from afar, and they may appear at any moment. There is no excuse for pessimism, but there is not much for optimism, for an optimism at least would render us insensible to the duty of prudence, of forbearance, of moderation in treating the difficulties between class and class. In the meantime we can rejoice that the laboring class is securing more of its due than it has ever yet secured, and yet for the present the pinch falls upon those classes which are not without resources, though their resources are rapidly dwindling in their hands."
