The Atlanta Exposition.

Of all the great exhibitions that have been held in this country, that which opened Sept. 18th at Atlanta is by no means the least important. The Cotton States and International Exposition carries something of its significance in its title.

The Southern States were so completely prostrated by the civil war and the misrule and robbery of the reconstruction period, that it was quite impossible for them to take any conspicuous part in the Centennial exhibition, or even to do themselves full justice later at Chicago; but they were eager learners on both occasions, and how well they profited by what they learned will now be shown at Atlanta.

Thus the New South has much to show that must interest us all. She has also much to learn, and this exhibition, with its comprehensive representations of the art and inventions of the world, will open welcome opportunities to the Southern people and give them help and encouragement in their new life.

PORT TREVERTON.

Port items in print have been scarce articles of late. Really from their rare occurrence one might infer the town ceased to exist or that the reporter had turned up his toes.

BEAVERTOWN.

Chas. G. Coleman, on Sunday tendered his resignation as secretary of the Union S. S. preparatory to leaving for Beverly, W. Va., where he has found employment in a telegraph office.

A Plain Statement.

The editor of the Lewistown Gazette presents an important subject in the following plain and forcible manner: There are few farmers who would enjoy having their crops distributed among fourteen or fifteen persons in amounts averaging from one to two dollars each.

not, but that is the condition required of country newspapers, and yet some people believe themselves imposed upon if they are asked to deal with the newspapers as they are required to transact other legitimate business.

World Wide Endeavor.

Ben Franklin once made the statement, "Schools teach us the rudiments of language, books teach us how to think; therefore, no man is truly educated unless he is a reader of books."

It is a volume that every one of our readers who are members of a Christian Endeavor Society will be glad to possess, for it contains facts in connection with the work of the organization that has never before appeared in print.
