wanth Silicon The Social Problem. No 2.

The conflict between labor and capital has caused much anxiety among philanthropists eversince the desire for gain has entered the world. The general tendency to make the rich richer and the poor poorer has not only existed but has increased. Human nature is so constituted that even if the most avoracious appetite has been satiated, there follows a still greater desire to be satisticd. Indeed it has been truly said that to satisfy a man, seek not to increase his stores, but to decrease his desires. The more wealth a man can accumulate, the more he wants to accumulate. If he has a million dollars, his heart is yearning for a million more. If he secures this, he will be looking for twice that amount. Thus, his desires will ly fortunate to amass enough wealth to purchase a county or a state, you

We fear his desire for control over wealth would become so strong that how an extended with an assume that the state of the state o affair for him; all virtue would be cast aside and some speedier method employed. It goes with the fortune seeker as it did with Johnny when he was a small boy. His mind was constantly centred on play,-a disposition not unfrequently found in youths. His mother found great in youths. His mother found great difficulty in keeping him at work. One morning, as usual for that day of the week, she directed Johnny to churning butter, while she attended to other household duties. As a faithful boy, he went to his task. He churned for a long time and still had no butter. He began contriving how he might finish his churning quickly. he might finish his churning quickly, any part of the U.S. quietly reached under the old cook stove and carefully pulled out a mal-tese cat with five little kittens.
