England's Proper Attitude Toward Russia.

In the course of the agitation, I regret very much to have seen many expressions of irritation and of indignation at the conduct of Russia altogether guiltless in this respect. It is a case in which we should do well to take the beam out of our own eye before raving at the mote in the eye of the Russian. In view of the Henry Hunt, evidence now patent to all men as | Prof J H App, to the real essential nature of Turkish rule England's attitude toward Russia ought certainly not to be that of resentment or of indigna- H II Hassinger, tion. But John D Sipe, England's attitude for fifty years has been just that which Russia has adopted within the last twelve Joseph Brunner, months. Let us grant, if you please, W J Wieand, the worst that can be said against W F Heeter, Russian policy, the effect of which has been to secure the tweive months longer lease of immunity to B H Custer, the Assassin of Stamboul. Under these circumstances, can one portion of the people decide what is best for another portion of the people, who have no voice or Lincoln Zieber, participation in the selection of G A Schock, rulers or the formation of the laws under which they live, and yet have the government express the will of James VanZandt, the people?
