L. DUNKELBERGER, Milliner.
Our old friend, Andrew Ush, came near meeting with a serious, if not fatal, accident on Friday morning. While coming to town, Mr. Ush being deaf, did not notice the arrival of mail train, and when crossing the track his buggy was almost caught by the engine. Those who saw the narrow escape say that he cleared the track by only two or three feet ahead of the train, and if the engineer had not slowed up a little, a serious accident would no doubt have resulted. It is always best to "look out for the locomotive" before crossing a railroad.—Herald.

Bucknell Wins the Relay Race.
In the relay races held by the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia, April 24th, Bucknell won the mile relay from Gettysburg, Dickinson and Franklin and Marshall. Time 3:42. The Bucknell runners were C. P. Meeker, Philadelphia; H. B. Riemer, Brookston; E. C. Conover, Hamilton Square, N. J., and C. J. Pearce, Erie. They ran in the order named, Pearce winning the race on the home stretch, pulling from third to first place and coming in first by over ten yards in a very pretty spurt. This race was pronounced one of the most beautiful events of the day. Each man on the winning team received a handsome gold watch, and the institution, winning was presented with a very pretty banner commemorating the event.

THE CRUISER COLUMBIA.
Marvelous Ingenuity in Utilizing the Power of Steam. What Her Ninety-six Engines Are For.
What a wonderfully intricate mass of machinery is a modern man-of-war! The "Columbia," for example, the pet of the navy, and fondly referred to by many as the "Pirate," shows to what a degree ingenuity can be carried in the way of utilizing the power of steam. This fleet cruiser was the first war ship ever constructed having three screw propellers, and it has the record of crossing the Atlantic in a shorter time than was ever made by a representative of any other navy. If a citizen of ordinary intelligence were asked to give a guess as to the number of engines aboard this ship he would probably answer about ten, yet the official list enumerates no less than ninety-six distinct engines, giving the function of each.
To begin with, each propeller is driven by a totally distinct and separate set of condensing triple expansion engines. To make each propeller wholly independent of the others in its operation each triple expansion driving engine has its own steam engine to circulate water through the condenser, another to exhaust air from the condenser, a third to reverse its valve mechanism, and a fourth to turn the shaft from time to time when in port and the steam in the main set of boilers is not up, making a total of five engines for each propeller, one triple expansion, three double engines and one single one. The three propellers have fifteen engines containing thirty steam cylinders.
When the boat is to be driven at its lightest speed, eighteen blowers for forced draft are used, each driven by a double vertical engine. One engine is used for steering, two for running the dynamo, one for the workshop, one for circulating the lubricating oil through the main engines, one for operating the wind-laws to raise the anchor, one for the cooling plant, and two for turning the winches.
For elevating the ammunition from the magazine and loading the big guns four engines of special type are used. Eight vertical double engines serve to raise the ashes from the furnace room and throw them overboard. In case the ship should spring a leak, or should be pierced below the water line by a cannon ball, ten engines not previously referred to could at once be set to work to pump out the intruding water. Most of these could also be used to throw streams of water through ordinary hose pipe in case a fire should break out.
Eight engines are put to use in driving fans which supply fresh cool air to various parts of the ship. These are distinct from those used to operate the blowers for forced draft.
For supplying water to the main system of boilers eight engines are regularly used, and for the auxiliary system of boilers there are four more. Besides these twelve feed-water engines there are 5 bilge and fire engines, which can be used whenever desired to force water into the boilers.
The total number of steam engines on board the ship is ninety-six, and the number of separate cylinders to be kept in working order is one hundred and eighty-four. The number of men detailed to look after this intricate system of engines is one hundred and ninety-six. This, of course, includes coal handlers, oilers, machinists and engineers.
Although the new navy contains several ships larger than the Columbia, there are none that have more steam engines for working them.

Should Have Lost All.
A young man in Lehigh county received $200 from an insurance company on a policy he held on his mother. Immediately upon receiving this money—which was a few days after the burial of his mother—the young man went on a debauch. He fell into bad hands and was robbed of $85, when he made a big fuss to the authorities and demanded they find the guilty parties. No one will have any sympathy for the fellow, as he deserves. Indeed, he deserves to lose every cent he received from the insurance policy, for one who has no more regard for the memory of his mother than to celebrate her death by a spree is lost to all sense of honor, and deserves nothing but condemnation.
Tramps Must Work.
Tyrona, Pa., has taken a step in the right direction by adopting a tramp ordinance. It provides for the arrest of vagrants and the turning of them over to the street commissioner, who is required to put them to work on the highways of the town, using a ball and chain to hold them in position. They are a nuisance to every town they enter, and it is right that severe means should be adopted to force them to steer clear of the town.
It is not difficult to distinguish a confirmed hobo from an honest man who may be in search of work, and it will be the duty of the officers to practice good judgment in executing the ordinance.
Altoona and Huntingdon have similar ordinances in force. Tyrona coming in closes up the links, and this long stretch of country now virtually bars out the vagrant. Middleburgh and other towns should adopt measures to rid themselves of the pesky nuisance. If the plan of making the tramp work for his bread as he moves along would become general the nuisance would ere long be abated.
