$20,000 Bond Given by Officials to Indemnify a Treasury Raid.

REEDER AND ELKIN IN THE DEAL

The story is one of the most remarkable, for various reasons, ever developed in the devious ways of Pennsylvania machine politics. It involves none other than the secretary of the commonwealth and the deputy attorney general in its meshes. It is alleged that still higher officials are involved, together with men of less degree. It is a disreputable proceeding all the way through, and one that must result in the severance of official relations if the men involved have any sense of honesty and decency. The story in brief is as follows:

Shortly after the election of Boies Penrose a number of political leaders waited on Governor Hastings and told him that owing to the amount of work accumulating in the legislature additional clerical help would be required. The governor took the matter under advisement, and upon the representation of these men agreed to an increase of three or four clerks, not more than that, to act as secretaries to the various committees. The men interested, however, immediately took advantage of the governor's limited agreement and immediately began a wholesale padding of the pay roll of the legis-

has been asserted, but this is not definitely known, that the padding of the payroll was done for the purpose of paying political promises in connection with the senatorial contest. Men of all characters and conditions were placed on the payroll, although they apparently never did a day's work in the legislature. These men, according to their own statements made to responsible gentlemen, were placed upon the payroll at the orders of Senator Quay. Certain it is that Senator Quay occupied a conspicuous place in connection with this matter and was one of the advisers in the matter of the now notorious bond for $20,000.

At various times during the session there were murmurs from the "Seventy-Six" about the number of worthless individuals who appeared to be hanging around Grace church and who were evidently obtaining money from some where. It was not until the final night of the session that an open attack was made on the padded payroll.

On that night Representative E. Corny, of Luzerne county, attacked the payroll item, declaring that it was padded, fictitious and largely bogus. That the names of men were on it who had never done any work except to serve the bosses and the machine, and that now it was proposed to take the people's money to pay the political debts of the party bosses.

The Heelers Grow Clamorous. Long before this, however, arrange ments had been made to pay the padded roll. Towards the middle of the session the bosses interested in this waited on State Treasurer Haywood and asked him to advance money to in part pay off this hungry list of political freebooters. But the state treasurer was too shrewd. He did not propose to be bitten. He knew the character of the payroll, and though he was advancing money at the same time to members of the legislature and legitimate employes of the house and senate he declined to accede to the request of the bosses, and so the money was not ad vanced.

Things now began to look serious The heelers were howling for their money, and the money had to be forthcoming. Then the bosses waited on the governor. They brought all the influence they possessed to bear upon the executive. Senators Quay and Penrose used their influence, but to no avail. When the governor discovered that the payroll had been padded and that at least $25,000 of the people's money was to be expended in paying the debts of the machine he served notice on all that he would veto any such item in the general appropriation bill.

This disconcerted the machine. It had figured out that the governor would quietly acquiesce in their nefarious scheme. Even when he served notice that he proposed to veto any such item there was still a lingering belief that he would prove false to the people and to his oath of office, and that in the end he would fall in with "the gang" and its plans and approve the padded payroll.

Quay in Consultation.

But in the meantime something had to be done. Money had to be raised to satisfy the demands of the so-called "employes." A meeting was called at the house of Speaker Boyer, in this city, to decide just what should be done. Among those participating in the conference were Senators Quay and Penrose, Lieutenant Governor Lyon, Secretary of State Reeder, Deputy At-John P. Elkin, John Glenn, corporation deputy in the auditor general's office, Speaker Henry K. Boyer, Bank Commissioner Gilkeson and others. It was finally decided to prepare a bond of indemnity protecting Treasurer Haywood in the event of the governor re fusing to relent. This bond was prepared at once by John Glenn and was signed by a majority of those present. The bond was presented to Treasurer Haywood, who, feeling himself amply protected, immediately advanced money to satisfy the hungry horde. The bond was for $20,000, and was executed about six weeks before the final adjournmen of the legislature. Elkin's Excuse.

estette mane emrinantis sylasthese

Strange as it may seem, in view of their official relations to the governor, Secretary of the Commonwealth Reeder and Deputy Attorney General John P. Elkin affixed their names to this money, or of their own money, for services which had not been rendered the state. Deputy Attorney General Elkin, the state chairman of the Republican party, attempts the following explana-

"It has always been customary for the expense bills in the Heller-Lautreasurer had advanced money. him in a uncomfortable position. This year he refused to advance any money except to members, and as some of th employes were in need of cash such a bond as described was prepared for the purpose of indemnifying the state treasurer against loss."

Reeder Would Do It Again General Frank Reeder, secretary the commonwealth, the one man officially nearest the governor, and the one man who should be his most faithful friend and adviser, treats his action in signing this notorious bond as of trival importance, saying that he had never made any secret of his connec tion with the transaction to his friends He considered it of little moment. He took the same view as that advanced by the deputy attorney general. General Reeder further remarked that he had signed the bond, and if the same condition of affairs presented itself again he would do likewise tomorrow. Considering it a personal transaction General Reeder stated that he did not care to mention the names of the other parties who had gone on the paper.

The Machine Dumfounded. The exposure of this scheme in the Philadelphia Press of last Saturday created the utmost consternation in Harrisburg and among politicians all through the state, and a big political How General Reeder can justify his position and still remain in the cabinet is something no one can tell. How Deputy Attorney General John P. Elkin can also justify his action in thus backcapping, to use a street phrase, his chief, Governor Hastings, is a mystery. Instead of holding up the governor's hands in a trying position, these members of his official family join hands with the element that were trying to induce him to abandon the people's interests and thus prove false to his great trust.

It Is Unconstitutional. In an interview in the Philadelphia Press of last Sunday Representative E

A. Coray says: "If that bond was given as may b payment of legal officers a bond of $20, 000 would not go far toward paying them. If it was given to reimburse the treasury for advances made to persons not legitimate officers and employes, the treasurer, even though secured by such a bond, would run up against the following constitutional objection which should have prevented him from making such payment.

"Article 3, section 10, constitution of Pennsylvania says: 'The general assembly shall prescribe by law the number, duties and compensation of the officers and employes of each house, and no payment shall be made from the state treasury or be in any way authorized to any person except to an acting officer or employe elected or appointed in pursuance of law."

The Bond Worthless. "If that bond was given," said Mr Coray, "to secure the state treasure for money paid out not to bona fide officers or employes of the senate and house, but to a lot of ward heelers and political hangers on, who had no claim for salary upon the state, the transaction was one that does not reflect credit upon any of the parties connected with it it any way.

"Senator Kauffman, of Lancaster, stated recently that state treasurers had been in the habit of counting as cash due bills, notes and other evidences of indebtedness, and if that statement is correct it would be interesting to know if this bond was to be ceedings be immediately instituted to recover thereon in order that the accounts may be promptly squared with the treasury, although, as I have before said, the state is amply protected from

"On the padded payrolls I have no information further than I gave in my statements on the floor of the house during the session. How the deputy attorney general came to overlook that is not clear. Numbers of people were employed whose names never appeared on the official list of employes and drew salaries for some political aid rendered those high in power. Some of the "Employes"

"Tony Bauer, of Wilkesbarre, de-scribed as a detective in today's Press was given a position as doorkeeper because he was supposed to have rendered some service in following Hastings' lieutenants in the Quay-Hastings fight, and obtained the place on the strenth of a letter from Senator Quay to the chief clerk, who, without consulting any person, put him on, and the state is supposed to pay Bauer a salary.

"James Griner, who was a member of the house last session from the First Wilkesbarre legislative district of Luterne, wanted a position in Harrisburg, and as he had moved in my district a few days before, he wanted me to sign his petition, saying he would get a position if I recommended him. I informed him, even if I was allowed to torney General and State Chairman pick a man from my district, I would not recommend him.

> "Griner went away, and I soon after found out that he was appointed secretary to the committee on mines and mining. I thought it strange and inquired of the chairman and members of that committee and they knew nothing creek. about him acting as secretary. Inquiry was made of a house official and he informed the committee that he had appointed Griner to the position 'under orders.' The chairman of the committee curtly informed the official that the committee needed no clerk, and if they did they would choose their own and not have anyone thrust upon them."
