

BEATS THE KLONDIKE

Copper River Country Abounds in Gold and Other Riches.

Its Good Ground Begins Right at the Edge of the Pacific and Runs All the Way Up to Its Source.—The Mighty Stream Washes the Bases of Five Gigantic Gold-Bearing Mountains, and Veteran Prospectors Say Its Banks Contain Many Millions of Dollars in Dust and Nuggets—It Is the Golden Gate of the Great Northwest.

While nine men out of every ten in the United States, Canada and Great Britain are becoming more and more excited over the big gold strikes in the Klondike region, and thousands of persons are vainly trying to cross the difficult Chilkoot Pass and the still more dangerous trails from Dyea and Skagway, in the hope of reaching Dawson City before the winter, a few hundreds of pioneers, ignoring the rush, are quietly laying up for themselves treasures in a land far richer than the Upper Yukon country and incomparably easier of approach. The masses may peril their lives, if they like, in the terrible journey across the snows of British Columbia, with imminent death in every canon, glacier and rapid, but the knowing ones—the men who have sought gold and found it since the days of '49—are directing their energies to a district much nearer the known waters of the Pacific. It is there that they expect to find more gold than the already overcrowded gold fields of Dawson can ever put forth, and that they look to find enormous yields of silver, copper and other valuable metals, aggregating many millions of dollars.

This district is the Copper River country, the richest region of the Northwest, according to the few mining engineers who have traversed it. It is many hundreds of miles nearer the coast than the Klondike, for it begins at the mouth of the Copper River itself, a short distance to the east of Prince William Sound. Unless the scientists be mistaken—and it must be borne in mind that all their predictions hitherto have been more than verified—it will yield during the next few years more gold than any other part of the great Northwest. And it is all in American territory, subject to the liberal laws and wise administrative measures of the Government of the United States.

Prospectors in the Copper River region need not be disturbed by the whimsical and outrageous discriminatory regulations imposed upon their contemporaries in the Klondike and other parts of British Columbia by the Canadian Government. Uncle Sam will see to it that their rights are protected and that every possible assistance is accorded to them in their search for gold. Alaskan soil will be as safe to them as Broadway or Pennsylvania avenue, and every dollar they dig out of the ground will be their own property, free from unjust taxation.

This statement is no mere conjecture. It is made on the authority of Mr. John R. Weeks of 44 Broadway, New York, who has the promise of the General Land Office to that effect. During a recent visit to the national capital, Mr. Weeks visited the national capital, Mr. Weeks made special inquiries along that line, and on his return to the metropolis he said:

"The General Land Office is very earnestly in favor of doing everything it possibly can to assist American citizens in obtaining mining claims on Alaskan soil, and to aid in every possible way in the immediate development of Alaskan gold mines and other natural resources. Americans going to Alaska will be well to keep in touch with the Land Office and with its branches in the Northwest, as on many occasions the benefit to be derived from such connection will be invaluable."

"In Washington generally interested in the gold fields?" Mr. Weeks was asked.

"Yes, indeed," he replied. "I found if possible greater interest in Alaskan affairs there even than in New York. Several parties are outfitting in the national capital now, and many more will be organized in the near future. Every acquaintance I have in the city applied to me for information, and our chief mining engineer, before he left Washington to join our party in Alaska, was besieged with applications by men who wished to accompany him. Interest in the gold district is certainly increasing as each part of the country as rapidly as it is in this section, if not more so. Government jobs should be plentiful in Washington by the spring, if the prospective exodus of departmental employees takes place. Men in every walk of life are anxious to go to the new Eldorado."

"I have advised all my friends to wait until spring, when the passes will be practicable. With Prof. John Muir, I believe men starting so as to reach the Alaskan coast by March or April will have a much better chance of finding gold than those who freeze and starve all winter at Dyea or Skagway."

Will Discount the Klondike?

Mr. Weeks is a strong believer in the Copper River country. He says it will certainly discount the Klondike several times over, and that it will be the center of mining operations in the near future.

that running in a northwesterly direction from where we expected to find the head of the White River is another large river, with many tributaries, and where we prospected we found gold in every gulch and creek, but we were not prepared to go through the frozen ground, for we had but one pick and one shovel. In some places we picked and shoveled off the slush a few feet until we struck frozen earth. Then we quit, for we were sure that in most places bed rock was quite deep. I now see we might have been mistaken. We saw some beautiful lakes of clear water between the headwaters of the unknown river and the White River.

Untold Millions There.

"That there are untold millions in gold, copper and silver in the Copper River, the White River and the unknown river at the head of White River is as certain as death and taxes. I write this that you may have it investigated and stop the deadly rush over the high Chilkoot Pass. A river steamer can run up the Copper River the year round almost, and you can prove it to the world."

George Stinson has just returned to San Francisco from the Copper River Region. He visited Cook's Inlet and made his way up Matamoski River, to river steamers all the year round. Besides, the head of navigation is only eighty miles from the head of navigation on the White River, over the easy Scorial Pass. It will be easy for the supply companies to keep all the mining camps that will be established on its banks well stocked with provisions, and the gold seekers will not be, as are the Klondikers, snow-bound the deadly passes will be forgotten by all save those whose friends shall have met death therein.

"Famine such as will be experienced at Dawson this winter is utterly impossible along the Copper River. That mighty stream is navigable to within a bound during the better part of the year. The climate along the Copper River is much milder than that of the Upper Yukon, and the country is more generous. It will be a great thing for the American people when the stream of fortune hunters turns from British to Alaskan gold fields."

A Stream of Gold.

The Copper River has its source at Mount Wrangell, at an altitude of 17,800 feet, in the 144th degree of longitude. It flows westward to the 141st degree, whence it comes south and then southwest to its confluence with the Chillyna River. Thence it flows south crossing over to Matamoski Divide. What he saw made a great impression on his mind, for he said on arriving at 'Frisco:

"There I found a lake 100 miles long at least. You cannot see across it anywhere. This lake is not on any map. I went around the edge of the lake and found a big river, which I followed down into the Copper River region. There are gold and copper veins of great richness up near the head of Copper River. I came down Copper River from its source.

The Indians Are Friendly.

"The stories thus far printed about the Copper River Indians are mostly untrue. They are as fine a race as ever I saw. They are as honest as the day is long, and will be good friends to any white man who treats them right. They did me any number of favors.

"They are tall, and are more like Sioux Indians than any we have on the coast here. They live outdoors all the year round, and never build any huts—only a wind break with a fire in front of it. They wear very little clothing, and are strong and athletic. They will fight if they are wronged, but will not pick a quarrel.

They have found one of the lost arts. They have a secret process of hardening copper and welding it to iron. I have seen numerous specimens of their work, and some of recent manufacture, too, but I never could find out how they made it."

Easy to Reach.

One point upon which all explorers returning from the Copper River country agree is its accessibility.

River steamers of light draught can go up the Copper River from the Pacific almost to its source. Prospectors then have a short journey of only eighty miles over the Scorial or Copper River Pass to the head of navigation on the White River. There they may board another steamer and go by water all the way to Dawson City, if they are still prejudiced in favor of the Klondike region, for the White River empties into the Yukon at a point far below the dangerous portion of the latter stream. The trip down the Yukon from its confluence with the White River is absolutely safe, for there are no rapids and no waterfalls. Gold seekers rafting down the Yukon from any point above the White River encounter danger a dozen times a day.

Vessels for the Copper River.

That Seattle investors believe in the Copper River country is demonstrated by the fact that some of them built a schooner in three weeks to carry a party of prospectors to that region. This is the Albert, which left Seattle a few days ago to go direct to the mouth of the Copper River and sail thence up that stream to its source. She is built of galvanized steel, is forty-two feet over all and can carry twenty tons of freight and six passengers. She has four water-tight compartments. The schooner Laura is also destined for cruising to and from along the Copper River. She is fifteen tons register, and will be kept on the Cook's Inlet route. It is probable that the steamship Queen will also ply exclusively between Seattle and the Copper River after this month.

A company has just been organized which has for its object the construction of a narrow gauge railway from to the Gulf of Alaska.

Its mouth, protected from the waters of the Pacific by three islands, forms a magnificent harbor, much like New York Bay. This harbor is separated from Prince William Sound on the west by Cape Whittard. A few miles to the southeast, situated much as Norton's Point is in relation to New York City, lies Cape Martin.

On its way to the Gulf, the Copper River skirts the slopes of five enormous mountains, all the wash of which goes into its current. These are Mount Sanford, 12,000 feet high; Mount Drum, 12,200; Mount Tillman, 16,000; Spirit Mountain, 2,000; and Miles Glacier. According to the experts of the United States Survey and other scientists who have traversed the Alaskan gold fields, these mountains should be rich in gold, silver, copper and other precious minerals, and any one of them may be the beginning of the great mother lode of the North American continent. It stands to reason that the banks of the mighty river which sweeps the bases of these giant peaks must contain more gold than any other region yet discovered.

District Full of Gold.

The scientists say that the entire district between the Copper River and the White River, running eastward from the 141th to the 138th degree of longitude is full of the yellow metal, and that wonderful placer finds will be made there during the next few years. Already the eyes of capitalists in Seattle and other Northwestern cities are upon it, and there is little doubt that a systematic exploration and prospecting of the Copper River region will soon be begun.

James R. Thompson, in a recent letter to friends in New York City, describes his visit to the Copper River country in 1884. He and his companions found gold on the bars of the White and Copper rivers and discovered that the Indian chiefs whom they visited were well supplied with gold nuggets. Mr. Thompson, who is a veteran prospector, says:

"I am so confident that gold mines equal to the Klondike will be found on the Copper River that, were I not dying slowly of consumption, I would have organized a party for that country in 1885. I predict it will yet astonish the world with the richness of its minerals. I picked up one piece of copper oxide on the camp ground at the foot of Copper Pass Creek that assayed 110 ounces of gold per ton.

Golden Gate of the Northwest.

"That pass is the natural gateway to the heart of Alaska and the Klondike. I will state my reasons for saying this: The White River is navigable from two and a half to three months longer than the Yukon River, and has no rapids. The Copper River Pass is not more than eighty miles from the head of navigation on the Copper River. I know we made only five days' march and four camps between the two points. The head of navigation on the White River is quite well protected with open pine timber, the trees growing heavier as one descends. There is an abundance of good timber on the White River for building boats. The upper part of that river remains unfrozen much longer than the great bend of the Yukon."

"Another observation made by me is tidewater, on Prince William Sound, up the valley of the Copper River and thence across the divide to a point on the Yukon River, near the boundary line. It has a capital stock of $5,000,000. The proposed road is to be 222 miles in length.

Thus, even the easy tramp across Scorial Pass may soon be unnecessary. Gold seekers may take a Copper River steamer to the head of navigation on that stream, cross the divide in a train and go up the White River to its confluence with the Yukon, with easy sailing all along the way to Dawson City. It will be no harder than the journey from New York to Plattsburg by way of the Hudson River, the railroad from Troy to Fort Ticonderoga and a steamer up Lake Champlain, which is one of the most beautiful trips in America.

But it is safe to predict that fortune hunters entering the Copper River region will not go as far north as Dawson. There is too much gold in the unprospected country between the Copper and White rivers to make it worth while to brave the rigors of the Arctic Circle. And the gold, silver and copper in the Copper River country are in American soil, free to all citizens of the United States.

Dawson City may be all right for men who have leather lungs and cast-iron stomachs, and who have been on the ground for the past two years, but those who wish to seek gold without risking their lives every hour of the day, without having to buy claims already located, at enormous prices and without being robbed by the conscienceless taxes of the grasping Canadian Government will do better to go to the new Eldorado that awaits them on American soil, where they may prospect unmolested and enjoy, comparatively speaking, all the comforts of home.

WIRE FROM DAWSON.

It is Within the Range of Early Possibility.

Uncle Sam and his cousin, the Governor-General of Canada, may both be outgeneraled by enterprising capitalists in the effort to control the future telegraph business of the great Northwest. While the governments of Washington and Quebec are patting one another on the back and writing voluminous letters on the momentous subject, plain, ordinary business men are going ahead with their plans. It is whispered in financial circles that several corporations already interested in the gold fields have set aside sums for the establishment of private telegraph lines between important points, and that one company has sent a gang of linemen, under three electrical experts, to the Northwest to string wires in American territory.

All sorts of propositions are heard daily in Wall street. One genius wants to have a detail of signalmen stationed at high points along Skagway trail to wigwag messages with flags from station to station. He thinks heliographs could be used at long range in Alaska, and points out that in some parts of the West Uncle Sam's soldiers signal with sun-mirrors between points eighty miles apart. Flash lanterns or searchlights, he asserts, might be employed during the long Arctic night. That a telegraph system of some sort will be established in the Spring goes without saying, for the newspapers themselves could better afford to form a syndicate to stretch wires than to pay the enormous expense of getting dispatches from their correspondents by dog sledge or reindeer express. But there would be plenty of private messages, aside from the great mass of press business, to pay the expenses of construction and operation, and leave a handsome profit besides.

Soon the chief operator in the Western Union's main operating room in New York City may participate in the following conversation over the Northwestern main wire:

"N. Y. N. Y."

"I-I. I-I."

"This is Dawson. Give me a loop to the Dolly Moon."

"O. K. There's your loop. Go ahead."
