THE BOY'S KING. My paps, he's the bestest man What ever lived, I bet, And I ain't never seen no one As smart as he is yet, Why, he knows everything almost, But mamma says that he Ain't never been the president, And that surprises me.

and often papa talks about How he must work away— He's got to toil for other folks And do what others say; And that's a thing that bothers me— When he's so good and great, He ought, I think, at least to be The gov'nor of the state.

He knows the names of lots of stars, And he knows all the trees, And he can tell the different kinds Of all the birds he sees, And he can multiply and add
And figure in his head—
They might have been some smarter men,

Once when he thought I wasn't near He talked to mamma then; And told her how he hates to be The slave of other men, And how he wished that he was rich For her and me-and I Don't know what made me do it, but I had to go and cry!

But I bet you they are dead.

And so when I sat on his knee I asked him: "Is it true That you're a slave and have to toll When others tell you to? You are so big and good and wise, You surely ought to be The president, instead of just

And then the tears came in his eyes, And he hugged me tight and said: Why, no, my dear, I'm not a slave-What put that in your head? I am a king-the happiest king That ever yet held sway, And only God can take my throne And my little realm away!" -Cleveland Leader.

TO HELP THEM THINK. §

TT IS A well-known fact that many persons who are subjected to nervous strains or compelled to apply themselves intently in their business or professional duties find relief in some sort of unconscious muscular exertion.

You have seen the man who rubs his bands all the time or else cracks his knuckles. Another man will tug at his mustache while in deep thought.

It is common for business men to draw pictures or make elaborate scrolls and scrawls on their desk pads while they are discussing some important proposition. It may be remembered that the directors of the world's fair left their hall one day after deciding upon a policy which involved the expenditure of several millions of dollars. A man went into the hall just after their departure and found the long table covered with rude drawings of men, cats, dogs and houses, to say nothing of elaborate Spencerian exercises, wagon wheels and the like. The great men had relieved the tension of the business by making these childish figures.

There is one Chicago millionaire who tears paper into small bits while he is talking to a caller. Another whittles incessantly. One of his employes is specially directed to keep him supplied with pine sticks of straight grain.

An office lawyer of considerable reputation stretches a small rubber band between his left thumb and second finger, and, looking at it as if fascinated, strums on it with his right forefinger coupled with the Finest Set of Steel while he is dictating to a stenographer. He cannot get to work until he has his rubber bend and begins to play on it. Actors or public speakers are especially given to these "nervous" habits. There is a criminal lawyer in Chicago who cannot address a jury unless he has a folded newspaper in his right hand. He grips this paper, bends it between his hands and smites his left palm with it. When he finishes his speech the newspaper is a rumpled wreck. Some of the most peculiar instances of this kind of habit are found on the stage. Charley Case, the variety actor who does a very funny monologue, carries a small piece of cloth in his hands every time he goes on the stage. He pulls at this bit of cloth and turns it over and over every second of the time while he is talking or singing. He could not do his specialty unless he had something to twist between his fingers, for he has a natural hesitancy of speech. It is related of John J. Burke, who used to be the comedian of the American Extravaganza company at the Chicago opera house, that he could not talk, except when he could turn a button with his fingers. Off the stage he stuttered so badly that he could hardly make himself understood. In fact, it was a matter of constant wonder, among those who met him off the stage, that he could master his infirmity when he was in front of his infirmity when he was in front of the footlights. Many persons who had seen him on the stage and afterward met him in his atreet clothes and listened to his fearful and picturesque stammering would not believe that he was the same John J. Burke at all. In fact, it is related that Burke went to the Columbia theater one night to step of the same offense only gets five days.

Although Burke's stammering off the stage was something wonderful and incurable, he would manage by hard rehearsing and the manful twisting of the button to speak his lines on the stage in such a way as to give no suggestion of his affliction. But one evening, just as he was about to receive the cue for his entrance to the stage, a mishis speech was repeated. He tried to speak his lines, but with fright and the dismay over the loss of that button, he arsenic, S.S.S. drove the disease out stuttered until no one could understand a word he said. The audience thought nently rid of it." it was funny, and laughed, but the comedian was in agony until he could get off the stage to have another button

Speaking of persons who stammer, Henry Guy Carleton, the dramatist, was a newspaper man in Chicago a good many years ago, and incidentally he stammered very badly. One day an acquaintance asked him: "Mr. Carleton, did you always stammer?"

Without going into the phonetics of stammering, Mr. Carleton's reply was: "Oh, no; not always."

"When did you begin to stammer?" "When I began to talk."

public speakers.

The audience at a recent meeting in the interests of labor organization had a diverting exhibition.

The orator of the evening was a man of earnest methods. When be addressed a house he "threw his whole soul" into his remarks. He tectered back and his remarks. He teetered back and forth on his heels and toes, bent his legs into acute angles, shook his clenched fist at his auditors and perspired man fully. He combined mental effort with a full set of gymnasium exercises.

And he was a great speaker-almost as great as Lieut, Gov. Haggard, of whom it has been said: "On a clear day he can be heard a mile."

The labor orator had spoken but a few moments when he was trembling, panting and perspiring. He put his right hand into a side pocket of his cont and pulled out a handkerchief, with which he mopped his moist countenance. Then be shifted his handkerehief to his left hand, pointed his right forefinger at the listening assemblage and resumed his speech.

A few minutes later he put his right hand into his pocket and brought out another handkerehief, wiped his forehead with it and passed it into his left hand.

When he produced the third handker chief and went through the same performance, by this time having three handkerchiefs elutehed in his left hand, snicker ran through the The speaker paused and frowned. His hearers straightened their faces and the speech was resumed.

There was another spicker when the fourth handkerehief was dug out from a hip pocket and a few persons laughed aloud when the orator began a rambling search for a fifth. He felt in one pocket after another, and all the time he had four handkerchiefs rolled into a ball in his left hand.

Finally a committeeman on the stage stepped up to him and called his atree ion to the four handkerchiefs in his left hand. The orator looked at them blankly and the spectators shouted with laughter.-Chicago Record.

Important Point.

One of the wittlest of the numberless witty retorts of Sheridan was that made to Pitt on one occasion. Pitt had compared the constant opposition of Sheridan to an everlasting dragehain, clogging all the wheels, retarding the career and embarrassing the progress of government. To this Sheridan, with his usual promptness, replied that one important fact about the real dragehain had been omitted in the minister's apt simile. "For," said he, clearly, with his eye fixed on his antagonist, "a real dragchain is applied only when the machine is going down hill!"-Youth's Compan-

Two of a Kind.

A rattlesnake observing the approach of a man with a kodak crept under a flat stone, leaving nothing exposed but the tip of his nose.

"I was not going to photograph you." the man with a kodak explained with a touch of sadness in his voice. "Holding the ancient faith in the divine wisdom of serpents, I have come to ask you why I am hated and shunned by all mankind."

"Alas," said the rattlesnake, "the gods have denied me that knowledge. Can you tell me why I am myself not very much sought after as a companion?"-San Francisco Examiner.

An Agreeable Arrangement.
