A leading Chicago packing firm has just built a private telegraph and telephone line between Chicago and St. Louis, to have direct connection with its branch at the latter place. A small switch connects the telegraph or telephone instruments. As the circuit is metallic and the wires are in a cable, there is no induction that can be noticed, and the long distance 'phone works better than the city ones. This is the first private line of over 200 miles in the west. It practically costs nothing to operate it, and it saves the packing company thousands of dollars a year in telegraph and telephone tolls.
