

SOUNDING THE SLOGAN

Protection, Prosperity and Patriotism the Party Watchwords.

CHAIRMAN ELKIN'S VIEWS.

He Believes in an Aggressive Republican Campaign.

NO PARTY FACTIONAL SORES.

A United Front to Be Presented to the Enemy in the Fight Against Free Trade and Free Silver—Impossible to Have Any Division of Issues or Principles in the Assault to Be Made on the Democratic Fortifications.

(Special Correspondence.)

Philadelphia, July 11.—Three P's—"Protection, Prosperity and Patriotism"—are to be the watchwords of the Republican party in Pennsylvania this year. Those who are in charge of the organization are confident it will be one of the most dashing campaigns held in the Keystone state for many years, and that the ticket will be elected by a rousing old time majority.

State Chairman Elkin has sent out a call for a special meeting of the Republican organization for Tuesday, July 19, at 2 p. m., for the purpose of nominating a candidate for judge of the superior court, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Wickham. There is no doubt but that Judge William D. Porter, of Pittsburgh, who has already been appointed to Judge Wickham's place on the bench by Governor Hastings, will be nominated by the committee for the full term of ten years. His ability as a jurist is so marked and so universally conceded that his selection is likely to be made without opposition and with acclamation.

BROAD GAUGE IDEAS.

While the members of the state committee are in Philadelphia Chairman Elkin will take the opportunity of bringing about a full, free and fair interchange of views, in order that the members may agree upon a definite plan of campaign. The issues were never so favorable for a successful campaign as they are at the present time.

The chairman has gone about the preliminary organization in a broad gauged and liberal manner. The Republican party is to be regarded as so large that no man who has ever voted the ticket will be refused admittance. Any factional wounds which might have existed by reason of personal or political quarrels in the past have been healed so effectually that the party will present a united front to the common enemy in the coming fight. The chairman has gone over the situation very carefully already, and he is convinced that it will not be a very serious task to elect the governor and other offices to be filled at the November election.

Colonel Stone, according to the chairman, will go into the gubernatorial chair with a majority that will astonish his friends and confound his enemies. At the same time the chairman and his corps of able assistants of the state committee headquarters do not propose to leave anything undone toward getting out the full vote and polling as large a majority for the ticket as possible. Mr. Elkin believes that harmony has been established throughout the state and that petty factional differences will not appear during the campaign nor on election day. The details have been mapped out in a thorough and comprehensive manner and the most competent men to be found have been placed in charge of the various departments of the state organization.

ENTHUSIASM FOR STONE.

Chairman Elkin in commenting upon the situation today said: "With the war with Spain wiping out sectional lines in the nation and with the American soldiers and sailors at the front winning magnificent victories on land and sea, there is no time for factional disputes in the ranks of the Republican party workers and voters of Pennsylvania. In the last week or ten days I have been practically all over the state and it is simply wonderful the enthusiasm that is being worked up for the Republican ticket. Among the great solid common people the Stone sentiment is tremendous. It is largely accounted for by the war feeling which permeates the commonwealth throughout its remotest nooks and corners in favor of the Republican ticket."

It is evident to the dullest mind that the issues in Pennsylvania this year must be direct and clean cut. There can be no division of principles, and it is idle to imagine that such an incongruous combination as half state and half national issues can be foisted on the intelligent voters of the commonwealth. Indeed, conditions have created, as they always do, the issues of the campaign and they cannot be changed, even if those in control desired to have them changed.

CLEAN CUT ISSUES.

Mr. Jenks, the Democratic nominee, on one side, and Colonel Stone, the Republican nominee, on the other, represent in their very personalities the two extremes for which the two great parties are contending at the present time. Colonel Stone stands for the three P's—Protection, Prosperity and Patriotism—already mentioned, while Mr. Jenks, who is an estimable gentleman, represents free trade and free silver, the two things which the people of the Keystone state will never tolerate.

Dr. Swallow is making a campaign of his own which is not likely to attract any great or general attention at a time when important issues are to be decided. As the peculiar personality of the reverend gentleman becomes better known to the people of the state his prospects of polling a large, or even a respectable vote, will rapidly diminish. The conditions that existed last year when Dr. Swallow surprised himself and his friends by polling over 100,000 votes do not exist at the present time, and those who are in a position to speak advisedly do not believe that he will poll much more than the normal Prohibition vote.

AN EARNEST CONTEST.

After the meeting of the Republican state committee, when the ticket has been fully made up and the details of the campaign laid out in their entirety, the contest will begin in earnest. The sampling tours of the candidates and their orators and the real live public work of the campaign will not be started until the early part of August, and possibly the beginning of September. In the meantime, however, the state chairman and his assistants and the members of the state committee will place themselves in immediate touch with the organization of the various counties and will arrange for the promulgation of the literature which will be depended upon to convince the workers of the justice of the Republican cause. All of the indications at the present time point to a magnificent as well as a successful Republican campaign.

Washington, July 19.—"I am glad to see that the Republicans of Pennsylvania have not forgotten Andy Johnson, nor the terrible warning of his career in the White House," said one of the few members of the house ways and means committee who still carries here in the summer smell of the hot asphalt street pavements.

He says it is to clear up some odds and ends of departmental business. He is known, however, to have the confidence of President McKinley to an unusual degree, and it is more likely that he foresees the delights and comforts of seashore and mountain at the president's request, in order that his advice may be had in any critical situation which may arise out of the present war. They were old associates in congress, and have been close to each other for many years.

"Under the present circumstances," he continued, with much earnestness, "the election proclamations in the various states ought to appeal to the party spirit of Republicans as the president's call to arms appealed to the patriotism of the country. It should meet with a like response. This is especially true of Pennsylvania, whose magnificent and unswerving Republicanism has so often stood the keynote of party success. We of other states do not forget that Pennsylvania was the state of Curtin, nor fail to remember how Lincoln leaned upon your great war governor in all the darkest hours of the rebellion, and it is among the most gratifying signs of the times to observe by the press reports from what under other circumstances might be discontented sections of your state, that your leaders are patriotically laying their rivalries on the shelf until this war and its problems are settled."

"But with Santiago surrendered, Manila under Dewey's guns, and the Spanish navy either under water or hunting a hiding place up the creek, do you seriously think the war will last past election day?"

"I sincerely hope not, so far as actual fighting goes, but war is like measles or diphtheria. The drugs it leaves are often harder to deal with than the disease itself. The greatest and gravest problems of this war will only begin to be set for the statesmanship of this country when the last gun is fired. It was so after the last war. It will be doubly so after this one. Some of these problems we have upon us already; some we cannot even yet predict. They have come without expectation or warning, and they will likely continue to come that way. Admiral Dewey's guns, in a couple of hours of a Sunday morning, changed the map of the world for generations to come, and the few modest lines in which he announced, in effect, that he had an island empire as large as New England and Pennsylvania ready for the American flag, brought with it questions of international and enduring moment, such as have not confronted us for a hundred years. Is this a time to swap horses, or to quibble over local grievances and differences? Is it a time for Republicans in states like Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, or in any Republican states, to speak with anything but overwhelming majorities?"

"You speak warmly."

"Every Republican who is close to national affairs feels warmly upon this subject. I value above anything else that has come to me in my life the esteem of my neighbors, and the unflinching confidence with which they have returned me year after year to congress, but if it seemed to me tomorrow that some other Republican, my bitterest enemy even, could be elected next November more certainly than I, or that his election would be more significant of the loyalty of my district to the president and the party, I would telegraph my resignation from the ticket, and urge his nomination with all my might. I am by no means alone in this feeling. Shortly after the war began I received a call here in Washington from a distinguished gentleman in my district who made a vigorous campaign against my nomination two years ago, chiefly urging that I had been in congress so long that I had become negligent of local interests. He had been openly pointed out as likely to run on an independent ticket against me this year with Democratic support. He traveled all the way to Washington to notify me that the war had changed the situation. He offered to go into the convention as one of the delegates, if I desired it, saying frankly at the same time that he made no pledges beyond this year. Said he:

"I know I am throwing away (or rather Sagasta is throwing away for me) my best chance. The next election will be in a presidential year, and with your well known closeness to McKinley you will be hard to beat. I had been thinking that as this was naturally an off year we might make the landing. But there are no off years in war times."

"And you think a similar feeling is developing in Pennsylvania?"

"I know it," he replied, "and so they do up at the other end of the avenue," jerking his thumb in the direction of the White House.

"You know," he continued, "we took an unusual interest in your affairs this year, because two of the most distinguished Republicans in your delegation in the house were rival candidates for the nomination. Those of us who had served longest with them and knew their worth were in somewhat quarrel. We wanted both of them to get their desires, and yet we didn't want to lose either of them from the house. I am glad, by the way, that Charles Stone has been renominated for congress. His people have honored themselves in showing their appreciation of his distinguished party services. So far as the colonel is concerned, if he is as untriflingly faithful to the interests of his state at Harrisburg, you will have a governor to be proud of. I have known him in congress ever since he came here, and so far as the party is concerned I feel confident that when he goes out of office he will leave the party more free from faction and stronger before the people than it has been for years."

"After the convention," he added, "I talked with all of the Republican members of the Pennsylvania delegation, and some Democrats. At the request of a friend who is deeply concerned to see a wholesale Republican victory I wrote to a number of business men in your state with whom I had become intimate in the course of tariff legislation. My information, coming from one and all, is the same, although many of them had been in favor of another candidate for governor, and some of them were rather limber heeled in their Republicanism, except in presidential years. Here, for instance, is a letter I got from one of them only a few days ago. After apologizing for delay in answering, owing to absence from home, he says:

"I don't take back anything I have said, remember, but I am going to put a cross in the circle this year, and vote for the flag. I don't approve of some things that were done in our last legislature, but while a Republican administration is in the midst of the prosecution of a foreign war these things which in ordinary times would be fair occasions for vigorous rebuke, seem to me trivial beyond expression. When I was a younger man we used to have volunteer fire companies in our city. The rivalry was intense between them, and fights were frequent. Sometimes two of them happened to come together on their way to a fire and then there was a battle royal. All the old grudges were recalled, and the old grudges satisfied. They had an elegant and stirring time to themselves, but my recollection is that the house usually burned down while they were at it. Our house is afire this year, so to speak, and so among Pennsylvania Republicans when election day comes around you will hear of very few Quay or anti-Quay, Wanamaker or anti-Wanamaker, Martin or anti-Martin, Magee or anti-Magee Republicans. We will just be one kind of plain Republicans until this war is over and its issues are settled. You are at liberty to show this letter to the president if you think it necessary. As to Quay, he is getting pretty well up in years, and can't live forever. I have made up my mind to leave him to Providence until the war is over. Then, if he is still running the machine, I'll take another whack at him, myself. Anyhow, I don't see anything to be gained, even if there was no war on hand, by colluding with the Democracy this year. Their state convention, in addition to kicking itself up and down stairs on the money question, defeated its most promising candidate, solely upon suspicion that he had not voted the straight Democratic ticket two years ago. And yet while they brandish his scalp before our eyes, in our ears they whisper that this would be a good year for Republicans to vote for Democrats. Nay, nay."

"This," continued the congressman, "I find to be a fair sample of the feeling of Republicans all over the country. The unfaithfulness of Andy Johnson after our last war cost the country beyond expression. We have a man in the White House now who is as different from Johnson as day is from night, and the election returns next November will serve notice to the watching courts and crowns of all creation that the people of the United States are as loyal to their president as its soldiers are to their flag."

And then we drifted off politics and began to talk about the war, and the harvest thereof.

GEORGE H. WELSHON.

WEST BEAVER.

Corn and potatoes are in need of a good soaking rain, otherwise the crop will be short. . . . Thomas Libby and Wm. Hook spent Sunday with Levi Treaster. . . . Perry W. Treaster and family spent a few days in Snyder county last week. . . . John Herbst and C. Stuck went to Mifflin county last week to help F. Riegle through with his harvest. . . . Our luckster, L. A. Jenkins, is making weekly trips to the Lewistown markets, with butter, chickens, etc. . . . Alfred Glazier of Lewistown has been spending the past week in West Beaver as the guest of his cousin, Warrie McGlaughlin. . . . The free-for-all-cake-walk at Crossgrove on Saturday was all right, W. H. Knepp winning the cake and divided it amongst 101 and had some left for lunch on Sunday morning.

In reply to a question from the correspondent of West Beaver as to how many teachers in Snyder county have pupils that attended school of former years, in the Spanish-American War.

I am happy to say I am one that have four, and would further say if my school work has been partly a failure, this one move on the part of those patriotic young men make me now feel that my work was not all in vain. Res. yours,

J. J. STEELY.

Will it Keep?

In reply to a correspondent asking Mr. Spier about his Oporto Grape Juice, he says he will warrant it to keep any length of time in bottles if they are kept full and well corked. The juice is not likely to keep long after allowed to come in contact with atmosphere over 40 degrees temperature. It is excellent for invalids.
