OLLOWED THE DRUMMER.

ambled to Find Where to Get Something to Eat.

One of Chicago's most enterprising mmercial travelers has just returned from an extended trip among the midde western states, down in the mule belt region, and tells the following od one on himself:

"A freight train off the track had deayed our passenger train several hours, that we could not reach the town of - until near midnight. This was the next town on my route and I could got afford to skip it, as I had several good customers there. As'I expected, there were no conveyances at the depot and I had to foot it nearly a mile to my hotel. I had not gone far before I had reason to suspect I was being shadowed. I had noticed a tall man with a slouch hat turning a corner every time I did and keeping about 50 paces or so behind me. Turning to take a good look at him, I recognized him as the silent stranger whom I had met in the smoking car, and while several tus were having a good time I remembered that he paid close attention to our conversation, particularly while I ons talking about my business. "Not a soul was in sight, the main treet was but dimly lighted and most the streets were not lighted at all n vain I crossed and recrossed streets, ven doubling on my track. The stranger in the slouch hat did the same. I ecame thoroughly convinced he was a old-up man, grade 'A' and meant immediate business. But I determined he should not catch me napping. Setting my grips on the street walk, I abruptly turned about and faced the sneaking scoundrel. He at once stopped, hesitated and then boldly advanced toward me. My right hand was thrust in my overcont pocket, firmly grasping the latest improved style of evolver, and in less than a second I could have brought it into perfect acion. But I didn't, I waited for him o get within a few feet of me, when hailed him in not very gentle terms with: 'See here! What in Halifax are er), of Ohio to Amelia H. Lepley, san Benfer, both of Centreville, on following me around for? What do widow), of New Berlin. on want? It's just possible I didn t v 'Halifax.' "The stranger was not at all disconeried. He came straight up to me and bland and apologetic tones said: "I eg your pardon, sir, but, hearing your onversation on the train, 1 learned ville, our business. There being no cabs ere and not knowing the town and seing ravenously hungry, I concluded to follow you, for I reasoned that if there was anything good to eat in this old town a Chicago drummer would be sure to find it."

"We were both reassured. I as to my burg. fear of being sandbagged, he as to his appetite. But the dinner, the wine, the cigars and the joke were on me, and I paid for them without a murmur, thinking I got out of it cheap." - Chicago

TREATMENT OF ITCHING.

Various Kinds of Cutaneous Irritations and Remedies for Allaying Them.

body or within it, is regarded by most physicians as a nervous malady, and has been dignified by the special name, "pruritis," which is simply the Latin name for itching. Persons of advanced dleburg. life sometimes suffer severely from a pruritis which is exceedingly difficult or impossible to relieve, for the reason that it is due to changes in the skin consequent upon old age. A very common form of pruritis is caused by cold acting upon the skin, and is called for this reason "winter itch." It is felt chiefly on the insides of the legs and thighs, although it may occur on the upper extremities, or even over the entire body. It gives no trouble in summer, or even in warm days in winter, but in frosty, snappy weather it is intense. Coarse underclothing may aggravate it, but it occurs even when the finest and smoothest silk is worn. It is usually worse at night when the sufferer is undressing, but gets better as he warms up in bed. The treatment of itching varies with the cause, but some form of external application is almost always used, whatever may be the underlying trouble. In case of general itching much relief is often afforded by an alkaline bath made by dissolving three or four ounces of borax, or five or six ounces of bicarbonate of soda in 30 gallons of water.

When the itching is local, a useful plan is to mop the part with a sponge or cloth dipped in a saturated solution of borax as hot as can be borne, or to apply a hot water bag. The itching is often made bearable, if not actually cured, by applications of dilute water of ammonia, vinegar, brandy, a solution of carbolic acid—one part of acid in 20 parts of water-or carbeized oil of 20 per cent. strength.
