

SANITARY HOG HOUSE

Dry, Sunshiny Quarters Are Absolutely Necessary to the Steady Health of Swine.

In some of the counties of Illinois half of the hogs often die on account of disease. In Iowa severe losses are reorted. Indiana, Kansas, Nebraska and Missouri report loss, but to a smaller extent. Kentucky is comparatively free. Wisconsin, Minnesota and the Dakotas are usually light sufferers. It is seen from this that disease is most prevalent where there are the most hogs. The massing of animals together Punch. and crowding them with so carbonaceous a food as corn is an invitation to disease to come and reap a heavy har- promise suit take place, Clara? vest. The surroundings become unsanitary, disease germs multiply fast, the system is enfeebled by damp, unwholesome surroundings, and it is not sur- dear. prising that bad results follow.

HEALTHFUL HOG HOUSE.

dampness. Dry, sunshiny quarters are absolutely necessary to continued health. All animals must have the sunshine to bask in or they will not thrive, and especially young animals require sunshine. These facts are too well known to call for proof. They are stated as a reminder and to point out a way to arrange a hog house so as to provide the needed sunshine inside. It progress. Why is it? is a simple thing to get the sunlight to stream in at the south side, but although it reaches the floor near the south side it will not reach far back. The problem is to get the sun's rays to the north side of the building. This can be done and the north side of the hog house made warm and sunny, even warmer than the south side.

To do this build the house extending cast and west and of any size desired, depending upon the size of the herd it is to accommodate. Then put the "peak" of the roof south of the center of the building. Give both sides of the roof the same pitch. To do this the roof of the north side will run higher than the roof of the south side in the place where the roofs meet. The cut illustrates the plan. Suppose the roof of the north side to be 24 to 30 inches higher at the ridge than the roof of the south side. Then there will be a chance to put in glass below the one roof and above the other, and the sun will stream through to the north side and kill disease germs by the millions and tone up the system pigs and shotes and make them thrifty and healthy. The alley runs through the center of the building and the ce are therefore just over the south side of the alley, and the sun will shine over the alley and into the pens north of it. The whole building is made sunny and pleasant by this center light, but if wished glass can also be put along the south side of the building to give direct light to the pens on the south side of the alley. A building like this will be particularly prized in early spring as a place to raise early pigs. For summer pigs there is no better place than out in a good pasture .-- C. E. Bennett, in Orange Judd Farmer.

A sloppy, watery mess should never be given young pigs, for by gorging themselves with it, they become potbellied, have indigestion and scours.

When the dam is seen to lie down to let her pigs suckle, and then jump up quickly to try to push the pigs away, sometimes not without giving utterance of pain, the trouble is with the teeth of the pigs, which have become sharp. These sharp teeth should be broken off or filed down. They can be easily distinguished by examining the mouth of the pig, and quickly corrected .-- Western Plowman.

Culls Dear at Any Price.

The time of good prices for purebred stock is a time of more or less temptation for the breeder, as also for the farmer who buys for the improve-ment of his herd. The breeder is tempted to keep and sell something that is not good enough to use for breeding. The farmer is induced to buy it because it looks cheap compared with merito-rious pure-bred animals. Both lose money in the end. The breeder who ells culls will soon have a corresponding reputation. The farmer who buys will lose many times the difference in price, and his faith in pure-bred stock to a certain extent.
