COLLEGE AND BUSINESS.

THE latest opinion on the much disputed question of the business value of a college education is that of Mr. Charles M. Schwab, president of the United States Steel Corporation. In an address to the students of St. George's Evening Trades School he says:

Success is not money making alone. And I want to state that of the truly great men I know in industrial and manufacturing lines none are college bred men who received an industrial or mechanical education, and who worked up by perseverance and application.

Let me advise you all to an early start in life. The boy with the manual training and the common school education who can start in life at sixteen or seventeen can leave the boy who goes to college till he is twenty or more so far behind in the race that he can never catch up.

No doubt Mr. Schwab correctly reports the results of his own experience, but other men of different experience reach exactly the opposite conclusion. Many a man of great wealth and high position who started with a common school training or no book learning at all is thoroughly convinced that he was handicapped in his struggle, and determined that his children, though they begin at the lowest round of the industrial ladder, shall have the best college education before entering upon their business career. The differing authorities suggest that probably it is all a matter of point of view. One man sees the college bred success. Mr. Schwab particularly says that he does not count money making alone as success. Therefore the inquiry concerning the comparative accomplishments of the educated and uneducated man in business is not to be answered by mere figures of salary or relative rank at forty years of age. We must see which is the happier and more useful in all the relations of life. When success is so measured, talk about one being so far ahead at the beginning of the race that the other can never catch up is idle. He may not "catch up", but he may be the better rounded, more useful man, the one for whom life is the better worth living. The college bred man may not fill some places in business as readily as his common school trained rival, but other things he does better. To him and his knowledge of science and mathematics some of the greatest advances and economies of manufacturing are due. The trained chemists and electricians are absolutely essential to industrial progress. Wise men in every line of business are on the lookout for assistants who will have not merely efficiency and executive ability, but large intelligence, and bring to their aid not only technical learning, but cultivated thinking capacity.

Doubtless a college education which turns a youth out on the world with the notion that he is a superior being who is fitted by his college diploma for at least a junior partnership in a business which he knows nothing about is not a fit preparation for industrial success. This education is too often the stock in trade of many well meaning boys, but thousands of others leave college with earnest purpose and alert minds, ready to learn a business from the beginning as they would a profession, and prepared to use in that business as they learn it brains well developed by conscientious use of the advantages of a college course. Success in business is largely a matter of individual character. The college man with the right stuff will get on, and the office boy with the wrong stuff will fail. A flabby college education is perhaps a worse preparation for business than no education at all, and the collegian's failure is much more conspicuous than that of the office boy and creates a stronger prejudice in the employer. The number of college men in business is small compared with the common school boys, so it is not remarkable that the latter should predominate among the great men of industry. That does not prove, however, that the earnest college graduate willing to enter business in the right way has not a fair chance and will not throughout his life find the college training a source of strength and happiness.

The old fashioned custom of merciless consignment to destitution and the almshouse of the bent and broken who have toiled diligently for unsympathetic masters for scores of years does not find so many admirer and approvers as it did in earlier generations. The ruthless logic of the survival of the fittest and the long agony of the aged and feeble who are trampled under foot as unfit are tempered in these days by impulses of compassion and goodwill.

THE Job printing department connected with this office is doing work that goes to all parts of the State. We now have one call from New York. The secret of our success lies in the fact that we send every customer away satisfied. That is the trick. Give us a chance to try it on you. Our price and work must be right or we could not compete with large city houses.

THE Selingsgrove Times says that town is full of cut throats, burglars and highway robbers. As it is not safe for an editor to walk the streets in broad day light, we had our pockets sewed shut before we went to the metropolis. It is no wonder Solly left town.

IN the news columns for this week's issue, the Post makes a proposition in regard to the book on "Snyder County Marriages." This book is carefully compiled and any one who buys a book and is dissatisfied can have the money refunded by returning the book in good shape. The book has no rival, no peer, no equal. It stands alone as the book of the century for Snyder County.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

SEVERAL of the most prominent railroad corporations in this country and in other countries as well have established, or are preparing to establish, pension systems which will be of inestimable benefit to faithful and devoted employees who have been many years in service. The disposition to benevolence in arrangements to lessen the hardships of old age for veteran workers is gaining ground in every enlightened nation.
