Last fall I built a cistern that will hold 170 barrels, in the top of the hill south of the house grout and cement wall; 15x6 feet, eight feet deep. The top of wall is six inches above surface of ground, and cistern has a frostproof cover. It was a back-breaking job, digging the ditch and cistern; had to use a pickax all the way (38 rods), and near the cistern the ditch had to be eight feet deep, so I can draw right from the bottom. No siphon business for me; a siphon will work all rightfor awhile, and the bother begins. The cut shows how I have my waterworks arranged; two hydrants in garlen and one each in flower garden. barn and pigpen; three valves in barn

one at creamer. I have three way cocks in well, so I can either draw from eistern or pump from well. I can attach hose at pump or flower garden hydrant, and throw a stream over the house. I have a hydrant by the stable door (inside) where I can water the horses; and the pipe then extends to the top of the stable room, and from there all the way on a slant, out through the cow barn in front of the cows, to the water trough in barnvard. so I can drain the pipe out and have no trouble with zero weather. There is a feeding alley in front of horses, where cut hay drops down from above; have a mixing box there and a short hose. with the ground feed just a step from t: so everything is handy for giving the horses their mixed feed. 1 put cement on one end of the bottom and part way up on the sides of the alley in front of cows, and use that to mix the cut stalks and feed for the cows; of course I have a hose there.

A novel employment agency had been started by Secretary Wilson, of Uncle Sam Fur- the agricultural dealahes Farmhands promises to give work to thousands of idle men and at the same time relieve farmers of much embarrassment growing out of the difficulty in finding hands to work on farms. For the past three years, says an eastern exchange, there has been a growing scarcity in farm labor. Men who for years worked regularly in the fields have deserted their old posts and gone into the cities, where prosperity has given rise to a big demand for help. This condition has proved a serious drawback to grangers, and there has been great complaint regarding scarcity of farm labor throughout the middle and northwest. In the south the cotton planters have suffered also, and it is said that had there been ample labor available this year the cotton crops would not. now be in such miserable condition. Many plantations are overrun with grass and weeds simply because it has been impossible to get men to keep them clean. Secretary Wilson thought over these evils and decided to try to solve the difficulty. He proposed to start a national employment agency for the purpose of sectiring farm hands. He opened communications with over 3,000 colleges and schools, educational and philanthropic institutions, making inquiries as to the number of students or inmates who would be willing to work in the neighboring fields during sowing and harvest times. From the letters thus sent out a list has been made of over 1,000 colleges or other institutions which are willing to furnish the names of young men who are anxious to get employment of this sort. In making up this list the secretary has been careful to exclude all agencies which make any charge whatever for their service, the idea being to bring wouldbe employers and deserving young men together without tax of any kind. A large number of missions and Salvation Army headquarters are on the list. It is the intention to make this employment agency a regular feature of this departmental work, and as all the preliminaries have been arranged it will be an easy matter to enlarge it year by year. The list will be for gratuitous distribution.
