Homemade Machine Which, According to its Inventor, Does Most Excellent Work.

Fig. 1 is the knife. The handle (a) is made of a two by four inch scantling and 3/4 feet long. The blade (b) is made of a piece of steel procured at the hardware or iron store 15 inches long three inches wide and one-quarter inch thick, but three-sixteenths of an inch might do. The manner of setting the blade is sufficiently explained by the figures.

Fig. 2 is a side view of the box and frame. The box is made of boards one foot wide and 3/4 feet long. By putting the bottom board between the side boards the inner measure of the box is 12 inches wide by 11 inches deep. Across the top of the front end of the box there is nailed a board (b) 12 inches wide, and underneath it, inside of the box, is an inclined board, as indicated by dotted line, which forms the mouth and throat of the machine. This helps greatly to hold the fodder in place for cutting. The legs, made of 1 1/4 by 2 1/4 inch stuff, stand with their edges to the box and are 3/4 feet high; bottom of box, 2 1/2 feet from the floor. The supports (s, s) are nailed firmly to the legs, and the box is nailed both to the supports and to the leg which, with the braces (f, f) make the machine firm and strong. The support under the front end extends four inches to the right to hold the upright pieces (u) in place, between which the end of the knife handle is held. There are also two other upright pieces (r, r), one in front of each of the front legs, which are adjustable to crowd the blade of the knife up close to the mouth of the machine.

Fig. 3 is a front view. The cross-piece at the bottom, which is of the same thickness with the knife handle, projects eight inches on either side of the frame to form a wide base, so that the box cannot be easily overturned, and the workman can place his foot on the end next to him and thus hold the machine in place. In Fig. 3 the pieces u and r r can be more clearly seen.

Fig. 4 is a bit of steel, shaped up with a square, smooth face for the knife to cut against, and is so nicely set in the mouth of the box as to form a smooth surface so that stalks will not catch against it when feeding them through to the knife. The blade, of course, is made with a beveled edge, and set so as to cut like a pair of shears.

My cutter cost me, all told, besides my own labor, not more than two dollars, and does more work and does it more easily than any of the cheaper machines on the market, says the Ohio Farmer writer who describes the foregoing.

How to Build Pig Troughs.
 A swine-raiser says: In fattening pigs they should have the trough room in length, not in depth. The pig troughs I see around the country seem many of them to have been constructed with the object of affording bath accommodations for their pigs; so deep and wide that the pigs take headers right into them. The room should be in length, not in depth, for all kinds of pigs, and the troughs should be kept clean. Pigs have the reputation of being filthy animals, but a pig will keep itself clean if it gets instruction in that way for a week, and a good example.

Sheep as Weed Destroyers.
 Sheep are excellent destroyers of weeds. They will eat certain weeds that cattle will not accept, and they graze very close to the ground, preferring the young plants that are just appearing above the surface. They consequently give weeds no opportunity to grow. Even thistles will succumb if the land is given up to sheep, provided the thistles are first cut down, so as to allow new growth for the sheep.
