What ho! ye baldheads, look up and be of good cheer. Here is glorious news for you, coming from a reliable source. It is always a pleasure to furnish encouragement for the bald. Baldheaded men are appreciative. To gain the gratitude of a baldheaded man it is only necessary to tell him his hair may be made to grow again. And he is ever ready to share his last penny with the man who has a hair restorer. Failure does not bear him down. He hopes on, hopes ever; he is always ready to try, try again. Therefore the following from the London Globe will no doubt come to the baldheaded as a thrice welcome message:

"The use of gas to make the hair grow is one of the latest medical discoveries. The gas employed is oxygen. A large cap fits tightly round the head, and is supplied with oxygen from a bag which is slung over the patient's shoulders. It is worn for a few hours every day, and even in cases of absolute baldness is said to produce a more or less luxuriant crop of hair. The discovery was made at the Oxygent hospital, Fitzroy square, an institution of which Princess Louise is patron. The gas is used for the cure of quite a number of diseases. A woman was undergoing the oxygen cure for skin disease, and one of her arms had for many days been placed in a tight airtight box filled with the gas. It was soon noticed that on that part of the arm that was unaffected by the disease the growth of hair was much stimulated, and this naturally suggested oxygen as a cure for baldness. The first experiment was made upon a woman who had completely lost her hair, and it was found that after a few weeks' treatment there was quite a strong growth."

It is further estimated that the oxygen treatment is found to benefit weak eyes and to cure consumption in a large percentage of cases, but these virtues may be lightly passed over if it will really restore even a fuff upon the head of the bald. Let us hope, chips in the Chicago Record-Herald, that the day may be speedily coming when the bald-headed man may, instead of paying over his hard-earned savings to the hairless drug clerk for hair restorer that refuses to restore, go about with his little oxygen bag slung over his shoulder, adding to the gaiety of nations and blissfully fostering the hope that never dies.

The postal department has issued a bound book of receipts for rural mail carriers, which resembles in a general way a check book, each page containing a stub, with a perforated line between to facilitate separation, says the Washington News. The book is kept by the carrier, and the stubs show the disposal he made of the money entrusted to him by the patron who holds his receipt. He is always supplied with blank applications, which the patron fills out himself and gives him with the money. The carrier's receipt in this manner becomes the patron's voucher, showing that he has given the carrier his money and his application; the stub becomes the carrier's voucher that money and application have been given to the postmaster, and that a money order has been made out in accordance therewith; and the postmaster's voucher is found in his own money order book, where a carbon duplicate of the order he has drawn is preserved. The postmaster may, if the patron desires and sends him by the carrier's hand an addressed envelope or letter, slip the order inside and mail it himself, or he may give the order to the carrier to be handed over to the patron on his next trip past the latter's place of residence.

That was rather a stalwart prayer that the little Gardiner boy put up and was expressive, if not wholly reverent, says the Kennebec (Me.) Journal. Living as near neighbors is a family that is in a deplorable condition, the mother dead and the four or five children coming along almost any way. One of the younger male members of this family has a decided fancy for climbing the trees on the premises and has received a few quite serious falls; so when the little four-year-old tot in the next house was saying his prayer the other night his mother was horrified to hear the following clause injected into it: "O God, take care of the Blank family. Tommy climbs the trees, and, O God, see that he doesn't fall and break his cussed neck." It is needless to say that that prayer came to a very abrupt ending.

The London Lancet, a high medical authority, says that the habit of self-drugging has grown to be a source of untold mischief. The practice has been greatly assisted by the enormous improvements in pharmaceutical preparations. Treating symptoms without medical advice may be temporarily satisfactory, but what if the physical disturbance be the sign of fatal disease? A little knowledge, coupled with overconfidence, is a dangerous thing in dealing with the ailments which come in so many forms. Varying the adage, it may be said that a man who is his own doctor has a fool for a patient.

There is a physician in Philadelphia who, according to a local exchange, is so fond of the music of Richard Wagner that whenever a child is born in a family of his patients he will suggest a name for it, invariably a name from one of the Wagner music dramas. Triplets, three little girls, were born the other day that will be named, thanks to the doctor's suggestion, Elsa, Elizabeth and Brunhilde.
