OF DICK'S FINANCES. CARNEGIE IS A MARK

Dick Saunders was off to boarding school for the first time, and Uncle Joseph was taking advantage of the fact to instill some good advice into the young scapgrace's mind.

"Don't be extravagant," he said, as he slipped a five-dollar gold piece into his nephew's hand.

"Don't spend your money for candy," continued Uncle Joseph, "or buy a lot of useless toys. You'll find your money goes soon enough without that; won't he, Tom?"

Tom, Dick's elder brother, readily replied:

"No mistake about that, uncle. He won't bring much back, I'll be bound."

"Now, I'll tell you what I'll do," said Uncle Joseph, "just to encourage you to be careful with your cash; whatever sum you bring back with you, I'll double it."

"Oh, thank you, uncle!" exclaimed Dick, seeing himself the future possessor of still more wealth; for how could he spend five dollars in three months, when Tom had given him two dollars and his Aunt Mary had presented him with a like amount?

There is no doubt, however, that Uncle Joseph's promise did a great deal to check undue expenditure on Dick's part. Still, the money melted away somehow, a great deal more quickly than he could have believed possible, and when the weeks had flown by and only five days more remained before the holiday began, Dick was more grieved than astonished to find that his total assets amounted to one dollar, a nickel and a two-cent postage stamp.

"That isn't much to get doubled," he said to himself. "It's lucky they pay our fare home for us."

As he was counting his money a boy named Brand passed by. Brand was older than Dick, and was reputed to be a singularly good hand at a bargain. He had tried to sell various articles to Dick during the last few weeks, but hitherto without success. But he was now the possessor of a treasure which raised Dick's envy to a high degree.

This was a baseball and a bat with which its owner had twice made home runs in school matches. Dick's bat showed signs of splitting, and he very much wanted a new one.

"Hallo, Dick!" exclaimed Brand. "Counting over your riches?"

"Not much of them," replied Dick, eyeing the bat.

"That's a pity, for I thought you might like to buy my bat and ball. Simkin told me you wanted them."

"So I do, but I can't afford it."

"How much have you got?" asked Brand.

"Only a dollar," was the desponding reply.

"Well, I can't let them go under one and a quarter, and that's very cheap. But look here; give me the dollar now, and I'll trust you till next term for the quarter. That's fair enough, isn't it?"

"No, I can't do it," said Dick. "I want to take the money home."

"Take it home? What a queer idea! Can't you get some more given you when you get home?"

Dick explained how he was situated.

Brand's face brightened considerably when he heard the difficulty.

"Why didn't you tell me before?" he asked. "Look here. I'll show you the way to work it. You give me the dollar, and I'll lend you three dollars for you to take back and get doubled; then you can send me the three and a quarter back, and still have two seventy-five of your own, as well as the bat and ball."

Dick hesitated. It struck him that the offer, though tempting, had something about it which was not quite straightforward. But there was the bat and ball only waiting for him to take them, and Brand was eager to persuade him to close the bargain. In a few minutes it was all settled, and Dick was the possessor of the coveted articles.

Now that he had so much money in hand, he could not resist a final visit to the village, where he spent 50 cents more than he intended. However, he reached home with two dollars in his pocket, so he felt he was all right.

A shock awaited him. Uncle Joseph had gone to New York, and would not be back for a week.

He waited a couple of days, and then a letter came from Brand, asking him why he had not sent the money.

Dick did not like to write and ask him to wait, so he took the unwise course of not answering the letter.

He spent the next day or two very uneasily, and then came the bad news that Uncle Joseph would not return for another week. Worse than that, at dinner time a telegram came for Dick, and Tom naturally wanted to know who on earth could be telegraphing to him.

"It's from Brand," said Dick, who now felt frightened, and saw he must make a confession.

"From Brand?" exclaimed Tom. "Do you owe him any money?"

"No; but I promised to lend him three dollars and a quarter."

"But you told me you had brought back two dollars," said Tom. "Send him that, and here's a dollar and a quarter to make it up."

Dick was delighted, and tried to turn the conversation; but Tom's suspicions were aroused, and he began to ask awkward questions.

The upshot of it was that Dick had to confess, by degrees, how much he had spent during the term for one thing and another. Tom mentally calculated the total, and saw that it was impossible that Dick could have brought back two dollars. He began to look grave.

"I'm afraid there's something wrong, Dick," he said. "What's been going on? Make a clean breast of it."

There was no help for it, and Dick had to confess the whole truth. As he did, he saw what a dishonest trick he had been playing.

"Why, Dick, I should never have believed it of you," exclaimed Tom. "Don't you see that you've tried to cheat uncle out of his money? And so you told me that you had promised to lend Brand some money, when really you owe it to him."

"This will be a lesson for you," said Tom. "I'll put it right now. Give me all the money you have."

Dick handed it over willingly.

Tom then wrote a letter to Brand, whom he knew well as one of the pests of Halehurst, and told him in very plain words what he thought of him.

He sent him back one dollar and his bat and ball, and told him that, unless he received an immediate letter of apology and regret, the professor would be made acquainted with the whole transaction.

The reply came by return of post, and was as apologetic as it could well be.

Dick parted with his bat and ball without a murmur, and when his uncle returned and asked him how much he had brought back with him he would not even mention the half dollar which he had actually saved.

He never allowed himself, either, to be led by the tempter on to so dangerous a by-path again.—Golden Days.

Asked to Pay a Debt Contracted by His Mother 53 Years Ago.

Nephew of Scotch Woman Who Lent the Family Money to Emigrate With Asks Reimbursement at Compound Interest.

Andrew Carnegie's dollar-scattering campaign in Great Britain has developed the alleged existence of a romantic debt the iron philanthropist's family left behind when it emigrated to the American land of plenty 53 years ago.

Henry D. Lennox, a resident of Glasgow, asserts that his aunt loaned Mr. Carnegie's mother 11 shillings ($2.75) to help defray the family's ocean passage, receiving the promise of repayment when fortune should smile on the Carnegies.

Mr. Lennox calculates that at the rate of five per cent. compound interest the little obligation now amounts to $44. He suggests that if Mr. Carnegie can spare the change he might be disposed to remember his old friends.

Mr. Lennox says:

"When the Carnegies left Dunfermline they were so poor that the mother had to borrow money to take them to the United States. My aunt, though a poor woman herself, helped them out to the extent of 11 shillings, but the promise to return the loan evidently escaped the memory of the beneficiaries, because they never repaid the sum borrowed."

"My aunt is dead, but she left two daughters, one of whom is the wife of a humble joiner in Dunfermline, while the other is a maiden lady engaged in a small drapery business in Edinburgh. Don't you think that if Mr. Carnegie knew this he would be willing to do handsomely by his mother's friends?"

Meavy Wellington Waack, general manager of a company whose services as a collection agency Mr. Lennox has enlisted, informed the Chicago Record-Herald correspondent the other night that the matter has been seriously investigated by Mr. Carnegie during his present visit to his highland castle of Skibo, and that he has decided to settle a very comfortable endowment on the heirs of the family of his benefactress.

THE RIGHT THING TO PUT ON.

(Benson's Plaster is Pain's Master.)

From the natural impulse to "put something on" a painful spot all applications for the relief of pain have arisen.

The most successful have ever been poultices or plasters, and the best of these is Benson's Porous Plaster.

No other has anything like the same power as a curative agent; it is highly and scientifically medicated, and its standard is advanced year by year.

Use Benson's Plaster for coughs, colds, chest diseases, rheumatism, grip, neuralgia, kidney trouble, lame back, and other ailments that make Winter a season of suffering and danger. It relieves and cures quicker than any other remedy.

Do not accept Capsicum, Strengthening or Belladonna plasters in place of Benson's, as they possess none of its curative power. Insist on having the genuine.

The people of every civilized land have testified for years to the superlative merit of Benson's Plaster; and 5,000 physicians and druggists of this country have declared them worthy of public confidence.

In official comparisons with others, Benson's Plasters have been honored with fifty-five highest awards.

For sale by all druggists, or we will prepay postage on any number ordered in the United States on the receipt of 25c. each. Accept no imitation or substitute.

CARDINALS AT ROME.

Have Singular Privileges and Rules for Their Conduct.

Always Dress in Red and Etiquette Does Not Allow Them to Walk—The Sacred College and How It is Constituted.

While in Rome etiquette does not allow a cardinal to walk. He must have a carriage and pair. When he goes out beyond the city walls an attendant follows him. Going to a public ceremony at the Vatican he is entitled to a gala train of three carriages, and if a prince to four.

In the pope's chapel the cardinals kneel at the benches on which they sit. They wear at ceremonial functions a cassock with a train of cloth in winter and of moire in summer. Collars, shoes and stockings are red. The girdle is of red moire with gold tassels, the rochet of lace and the mozetta the same as the cassock. In Rome the rochet is covered with a red mantelletta; outside the city it is uncovered. The hat is red felt with gold tassels.

The cardinals di curia, or those residing in Rome, are entitled to a yearly income, or pittance, of 3,000 lire—about $5,400—which is paid out of the Pope's penance. The cardinal dwelling ordinarily has these special appointments: At the entrance is an antechamber for the domestics. Above a credence are the arms of the cardinal under a canopy. On the wall are suspended his two kneeling cushions, one of red and the other of violet silk, and his two umbrellas of the same colors. These last are for covering him when he is making a solemn entry into a church or following the viaticum bareheaded. The second room is for the cardinal's secretary. The third is called the antechamber of the brettea, because the red brettea is placed there on a console before a crucifix. Then comes the throneroom. When a cardinal asserts that the pope has said this or that, or has given such an order, he must be believed on his word without being obliged to prove it. This is called the oraculum vivae vocis.

Cardinals should be 30 years of age. Mgr. Martinelli will be one of the youngest members of the college. He is now 53. Cardinal Skabensky, archbishop of Prague, is the youngest, being only 38. Cardinal Yvovis Yoto comes next. He is 47. Then Mgr. Martinelli fits in, says the Baltimore Sun.

When the sacred college is complete there are 70 cardinals, namely six bishops, 50 priests and 14 deacons. Cardinals of a lower order have, with the consent of the pope, the right of option to pass to a higher order. The deacons can choose the vacant places of the cardinal priests if they have been deacons for ten years, and have been ordained to the priesthood. The senior cardinal priest present in Rome when one of the six bishoprics falls vacant has the option to succeed to it, with the exception of the sees of Ostia and of Porto, which are reserved for the dean and the subdean of the sacred college. The dean is the senior cardinal, dating from his promotion to one of the sees.

There are now 67 cardinals—40 Italians and 27 of other nationalities. It is said that Pope Leo XIII. desires always to have the membership near the plenium, or limit, and that he said just before making out the recent list of 12 new cardinals:

"Better that there should be as many as possible to choose from in the next conclave." Pope Pius IX., having had the longest reign, created the most cardinals, 179; Pope Leo XIII. has created 136 cardinals since he began his pontificate.

Besides Cardinal Martinelli seven other cardinals have had to do with the church of North America. They are Cardinal Cheverus, the first bishop of Boston; Cardinal McCloskey, archbishop of New York; Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore; Cardinal Taschereau, of Quebec; Cardinal Percece, bishop of Savannah; Cardinal Mazzella, the Jesuit theologian and professor at the college at Woodstock, Md., and Cardinal Satoll, former delegate to the United States. Of these cardinals Cheverus, Percece and Mazzella had left this country before they were created cardinals.

Rebuke to Stinky Employers.

Judge Danforth, of Maine, believes that a fair salary tends to keep a man honest. Lately, in speaking of a convicted bank cashier, he said: "I wish that the law permitted me to send with the accused every one of the bank directors who, through a long term of years, expected you to do your work, live respectably, bring up a large family and be honest—all on a salary of $500 a year."

TO USE WIRELESS TELEGRAPH

Attempt to Establish Station on Puget Sound to Report Incoming Vessels.

Experiments with wireless telegraphy for reporting incoming ships will soon be made between Tatoosh Island and Neah bay, at the entrance to Puget sound. At one time the government maintained a station for reporting and observation on the island, but the cable to Neah bay broke several years ago, and since then vessels have been reported from Neah bay. The government now proposes to reestablish the Tatoosh Island station and to reopen telegraphic communication with the mainland. If the experiment with wireless telegraphy fails, a cable will be laid between the island and Neah bay. Owing to currents and rocks between the island and the mainland, the life of a cable off Cape Flattery is very short, so the government will do its best to make wireless telegraphy in success in order to save the cost of expensive cables. A reserve has been set aside at Tatoosh Island, and plans and specifications have been made for a station to cost $5,000. It is expected that bids will be called for at Washington within a month.
