THE GOSPEL OF PEACE.

MANKIND DID NOT FULLY UNDERSTAND IT UNTIL CHRIST WAS BORN.

A HAT is tenderest and best in the heart of man is evoked when the keys of memory are touched and the song of the Christ-day is sounded. It is the music of nome and the loved, a glad, if subdued, melody recalling the earliest days of recallection an eager rush for well-filled pendant stockings, for the laden Christmas tree, with its gifts for all of the household. Aye. and the eager rushing about the house with merry shout and joyous greeting for and the gathering of all about the family Whether the corridors of our memory mansions be long or short-our lives be many or few, the harmonies ring along them just the same, telling of the presence in the heart of that which is old as immortality, and which shall never die-love. There, then, this Christmas day, that Christmas manutes, for friends and for humanity.

The Christ-day practice of opening the neart to unselfish influences is bern of commemorates. His the life beautiful, the of his interest, life rounded, the only completely perfect life. He taught the lessons of love, gentle- knowledge and belief as to time and ness, mercy, compassion, forgiveness, benevolence, chastity and self-denial. Peace on earth! good will to men! That higher song which lifts man above himself and makes him but little lower than the

The Christ theme will never die. First heard on the plains of Bethlehem, with the frowning Herod-temple but three miles away, within whose walls were heard the teachings of the law of revenge and love of self, heard there for the first time, it has been sounding ever since, spreading wide and wider, until now it compasses the whole earth. In Christ's day Rome had waxed to its noon of majesty, yet Rome passed and was not. On that kingdom rose other kingdoms, which perished in their turn. Since He lived one system after another sys tem of philosophy has been built up, only to be torn down again. But the words of the Christ be and abide, and they shall stand forever, influencing men to nobler lives and higher results in living. His Kingdom is an everlasting Kingdom, and of its duration there shall be no end.

Meet and right is it, then, that the Christ-day shall be one of gladness in the human heart; that the children shall take part in it, since He loved them and blessed them, and that gifts shall be exchanged in token of that love for one another, which He bore for all humanity.

The Boy Art Critic,

Wise men say there is nothing really new in this world, and perhaps the boy who passed the following critleism upon the drawing abilities of his big sister was an unconscious plagiarist; but, anyway, his verdict amused the sister so much that she tells it occasionally, though the joke is on herself. The young woman has a fendness for executing those works of art which consist in the representation of dead game birds hanging by their while the havor on the fo heels from a nail on a board, fish on a platter ready for the cook, and fruit grouped on a table around a wine glass. These gems she turned off at the rate of thout four a year, and presented them to her friends for their dining-room walls. She had just completed a twin pair for a bride. One represented a mess of lobsters in a nest of salad; the other a basket of peaches, with down on them like plush. She was so pleased with both that she asked her brother if he did not think they were just splendid. It was evident that the youthful critic liked one and not the other. After looking at them a minute or two he

The Bird of the Season. The bird I love ne'er spreads a wing To soar into a cloudless sky He's not a harbinger of spring. Not being much upon the fly

He never warbles with his breast Against a thorn, as you'd suppose, Nor flutters songful round his next, Nor twitters to the budding rose

I never knew his tuneful notes To fill with melody the wood; There's something wrong about his threat. His range and compass is not good

Nor does he dart through leafy screens With rainbow plumage flashing bright. He can't be called by any means

A dazzling jewel to the sight But put, well stuffed and brown and back. Upon a platter fair to see, He bits my sentimental spot— The turker is the bird for me
