ORCHARD CULTIVATION.

The Advantages of a High Crop Rye on Northern Sections Cannot Be Overestimated.

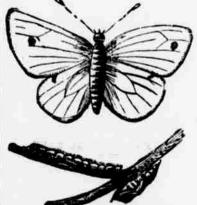

There is little question in the mind of any intelligent farmer about the value of orchard cultivation up to the bearing period, but not all agree that it should extend beyond. Nevertheless there is nothing worse for an orchard than a bare soil left to take care of itself. Weeds will invariably appear in such a soil, and these wil do considerable harm in robbing the land of the richness which the trees need. There must be some counter balancing method. Of the many experiments made with orchards that have been treated with and without cultivation after the trees began t produce, the great majority showed a decided improvement in favor o those which have been cultivated This, however, does not mean any more than mere surface cultivation and for that matter not much more than a surface scratching of the ground in the spring sufficient t make grass or grain seed eatch There is no better plant fertilizer than good rye turned under or al-EASTWARD lowed to decay in the field. Every AM PM crop of this that we can raise and return to the soil should increase the fertility, so that the young and old trees will make a new growth. The plowing of the surface in th spring need not interfere with the roots of the trees. Indeed, special care should be taken to avoid any such contingency. The soil can eas ily be stirred to a sufficient depth to hake the seeds grow without touch ing the roots. If these latter run! very close to the surface, the plow or cultivator should not be run up near the trees; but as a rule this stirring of the top soil every year tends to make the roots of the tree seek a lower level, and in orchards that have been cultivated from the beginning little trouble will be experienced with the surface roots. Sow from one to two bushels of rye to the acre, so that the ground will be covered before winter. This will help to protect the roots of the trees from the severe cold, and the following spring when turned under the rye will add rich fertility to the soil The advantage of a high crop of rye in the orchard in the fall in the states where the winter freezing is apt to injure fruit trees cannot be overestimated. The tall rye proves a most effectual blanket to the tree roots and trunks, and few trees are injured from freezing when treated in this way. The thick rye is really warmer and superior to a covering of snow. When feed is scarce the temptation to cut the rye in the orchard is great, but do not yield to it. No orchard can thrive which is systematically robbed of its fertility .- 5. W. Chambers, in Journal of bage and allied plants, producing the well-known green cabbage worm. After feeding for a time the worm leaves the plant, changes to a chrysalis, from which the adult emerges shortly afterward. There are several broods each season.

Attempts have been made to destroy these pests by the cultivation of a contagious disease, which has been found to attack the worms. This remedy, however, has not been successful and other means must be followed for its destruction. Hand picking the worms, although tedious, is an effective remedy on small areas. Insect powder, known also as pyrethrum, or buhach, may be mixed with six or eight times its bulk of flour and dusted on the plants. It should be applied about once a week.

It is not injurious to human beings. In some places hot water has been Thirty-five years' reputation is back of the Hayner Distribing Co's Seven-Year-Old Rye. The Journal of the American Medleaf association is of the opinion that Crowded Media there is a surplus of ductors in the ent Profession. United States, and regrets that the surplus is increasing. Phere is now one doctor to every 600 of population. As this is not on the whole an unhealthy country, one phycician ought to be able to look after the aches and pains of 1,000 ordinary people. Wherever more men are emplayed to perform any kind of service than are actually needed, either the community has to pay 100 much for services rendered or some of the men employed must be unable to make more than a bare living, if they make that. According to the Journal 1,600 doctors die yearly, in splie of their skill, but almost 6,000 are born. The medical colleges, although the require ments are severer than formerly, are turning out 6,000 graduates a year. If this keeps on, how long will it be before there is one doctor for every 100 of the population? Then societies would not be safe save in the east of starving M. EXERCISING THE BULL

A Simple Device That Has Been Found of Practical Value by All Who Have Tried It

The cable, with a sliding ring or puley attached, for the purpose of exerrising a bull, is not entirely unknown among stockmen and farmers, but its value is certainly little appreciated, if one can judge from the few that are n use, compared with its real utility, says C. P. Reynolds, in Breeder's tia zette. I do not know that I have in mind more than one or two at the present time. We have had one of these devices in use for several years, at practical value, but we are sure we would prefer it to an enclosed pen, avt possibly in the case of a very vicious anima, where probably the cable would be very much our of order.

The cable is passed through the prate about nine feet from the ground. At a distance of about four feet from the post it will be observed that an exring is spliced into the wire. Our main object, however, in putting the rings in at either end was to prevent the bull from coming closer to the posts than is safe. If allowed too close, there is danger of his becoming entangled and
