POULTRY & BEES

MANAGEMENT OF DUCKS

The Man Who Expects to Make His Poultry Pay Must Take Excellent Care of Them.

It is not absolutely necessary, have so warm a house for Pekin ducks as for fowls, but it pays best to have a good comfortable house for them as will be shown presently. Properly cared for, ducks begin to lay during the winter months; those are hatched quite early in the spring may lay in December. We should fer ducks in their second year breeders, or at least very early hatched ones, so they might be a year or quite one year old before eggs are used for hatching. Ducks lay better than are hatched eggs that are laid by mature ducks. Ducks can be plucked during weather, just prior to beginning moult; then all the blood has from the quill of the feather, and little pain is given by plucking at that time.

Ducks sit about on the ground; do not roost like fowls. It is habit to lay their eggs very early in the morning, often before day for this reason they are driven from the house at night, and kept shut several hours after sunrise prevent them from running about dropping their eggs on the ground wherever they may be. Pekin ducks are a kind of a machine; they lay an egg in a nest, and will lay most of them in the water if allowed their freedom and are not shut at night. We doubt if one out of them would go into the house if they are allowed to run as please.

For these reasons they should have a comfortable house that has a good dry earth floor. This should be covered over with straw or dry meadow grass for them to rest on at night. During cold weather the house should be closed up like the hen house, and spring and warmer weather come, all the air and ventilation while they are shut in. You will it necessary to drive them in at night or to give the evening meal within the house, and shut them in while eating. The litter should be turned at least twice a week; it should be put out in the sun once a week to dry, and at this time the litter should be cleaned and the litter back. We know that some who keep ducks do not clean the houses all winter. With such care the ducks and their eggs are always covered with dirt.

For old or laying ducks, mix one fourth wheat bran, the rest good food, cooked vegetables and meadow scrap. Mix into this some coars sand, and mix all into a dry mash with water. The green food should be cut up into short pieces; green oats or clover is good for this. When the ducks are not laying, feed little when laying, feed strong two or three times a day; if they grow fat, feed less corn meal and meat and meadow scrap. Always feed the ducks troughs or boxes. They should have plenty of grit and oyster shell. T. said that is mixed in their food good for digestion or grinding, but they must have in addition to the food grit or shell. Green cut bone meal of any kind is good for the animal food is better if cooked for ducks.

Pekin ducks will do very well with simply enough water to drink, at thousands of them are raised that never had a chance to swim in water at all. At the same time, ducks that are kept for breeders do better when they have the chance to swim and walk in the water.—Country Gentleman.

AMONG THE POULTRY.

If the hen is a machine for converting feed into eggs, it is a plain business principle that the machine should be kept running at full capacity and at the lowest cost.

Don't keep a single fowl over winter that you can't make pay its board. Cull them out and sell for what they will bring. The feed and care they saved may be given to the more worthy ones.

Although eggs are a good price now they will go higher later on. And the hens will be sure to suffer business unless they have comfortable quarters and are well cared for.

Increasing the profits depends largely on the observance of three important points: Increasing the quantity, improving the quality and obtaining a better price for the product sold.

To frequently change from one breed to another is nearly always attended by more or less expense; in other words loss. And to experiment in cross breeding is still worse. To find some one pure breed that most nearly meets the demand of your fancy and your market, the stick to it and make it pay.
