That Chester county, Pennsylvania, the great center for antiquities in the way of furniture and other articles of the colonial period seems to be proved by this story told by the Philadelphia Record: "Three Bostonians came to this city the other day and applied at one of the libraries for the populations of various towns in the interior of the state. After these figures had been given them they volunteered this information: 'We are dealers in antiques—in grandfathers' clocks, colonial furniture, tall boys, old china and such things—and we are now going to take a train for Chester county, for the villages of that county are the most fruitful hunting grounds for antiques in the United States. It is odd that this should be so, seeing how the district has been scoured by men in our business for many years, but so it is, and the fact is generally recognized. The Chester county people themselves recognize it. They appreciate well the market value of their heirlooms, and it is impossible any longer to drive mealy good bargains with them. But their stuff is so excellent that we must leave it, even though the prices we pay are high.'

the city of Great Britain, continental have been completed and as a Prophecy of Isthmian canal before many years ago. has become a certainty, it is timely to recall a interesting prophecy. In 1832 congress authorized the president to procure surveys for the selection of a route for a railroad to the Pacific. Under this authorization four expeditions were sent out and the routes were surveyed, the longest nearly two years. In 1845 Mr. Edward Williams, a writer of the period, declared that "when these gigantic plans shall be consummated—when the shores of the Pacific shall be reached by railways, when the telegraph shall girdle the earth and ocean steamships shall ply regularly between their termini and farther India, whose wealth the commercial world has so long coveted—the beaten track of commerce will be changed and new and wonderful page in the history of the world will be opened." Four decades nearly 50 years ago, that shows pretty clear vision; yet the writer overlooked the acquisition of Hawaii and the Philippines by the United States.

NEW BRITISH STAMPS.

Postage and Revenue Portrait of Queen Victoria Yields to Bust of King Edward.

With the new year in Britain began the issue of the stamps of the new reign. The penny (two cent), which will become the most familiar, is a bright red, the authorities having gone back to the old color.

King Edward VII's head takes the place of Victoria's, whose portrait figured on the national stamp for more than 60 years, penny postage dating from January 10, 1840. For the greater part of her reign the queen was represented by the single portrait taken in her youth.

Opinions differ as to the design for the face of King Edward, and some find difficulty in recognizing the likeness.

The present issue of stamps include the half-penny (green), the 2½ pence (blue), used especially for foreign countries, and the six-penny (purple), all having the same design, except that the 2½ pence stamp bears its denomination in figures.

A Bitter Blow.
"This," said the prostrate horse, moving its injured limb to a less painful position on the slippery pavement, "is indeed the irony of fate."

"Do you refer," asked its unharmed mate, sympathetically, "to the proverb concerning a haughty spirit before a fall?"
"No," replied the horse; "but I have just heard them call for an automobile ambulance to carry me to the veterinary hospital."—Town Topics.

Too Literally Harmonious.
Haberdasher—What is this you have done to Vanity? He declares you have insulted him, and that he will never buy another penny's worth in this store.

Clerk—Why, he came in and said that he wanted a complete outfit that harmonized with his physique. I glanced down at his legs and laid a bow tie on the show case, and before I could dig up the other things he was gone.—Los Angeles Herald.

One Definition.
"What is the difference between a statesman and a politician?" asked the little boy who wants to grow up to be wise.

"A statesman," said the man of great practical force, "is the man who is studying what the constitution of the United States means, while the other people are hustling to get votes."—Washington Star.

Ambiguous.
"He may mean well," said the young doctor, "but I don't exactly like the tone of his letter."
"What's the matter?" inquired the old practitioner.
"Jones, the undertaker, writes and says that if I will send my patients to him he will guarantee them satisfaction."—Judge.

Hard Luck.
"Aren't you glad you are living in this age of invention?" exclaimed the thin man with the wart on his nose.
"Can't say I am," replied the bald-headed man. "You see, I married a widow, and she's got a phonograph that she is forever having grind out records that her first husband made!"—Brooklyn Eagle.

PLEASED WITH AMERICA.

Max O'Rell Pays a New and Charming Tribute to Our Women and Our Progress.

Max O'Rell, who has just returned to America for the seventh time, has sent to Paris an account of his latest impressions of the Americans and their country. Since his first voyage to the United States 14 years ago there have been prodigious changes, he says. Everyone helps to turn the wheel of progress, rich and poor, young and old, except, perhaps, the Anglo-maniacs, who turn up their trousers when it rains in London.

At the first voyage he stood in amazement before the houses of 15 stories, and now he finds them there of 32.

M. BLOUET-MAX O'RELL.
(French Satirist Who is Now Visiting the United States.)

The city, he says, is no longer able to extend itself from east to west, neither to the north nor the south, so it is obliged to mount to the clouds. The step thence to the celestial country, at this rate of advance, will soon be very short.

Fourteen years ago, when he passed up and down Broadway, and met there so many men hurrying along with frowning brows, he said to himself: "Poor devils, they are returning from visits to friends who live at No. 538 East One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street or No. 392 West One Hundred and Thirty-eighth street." But now when he sees them he exclaims: "Poor friends, they are asking themselves if at four o'clock they are going to be millionaires or dead broke."

The few words that he has devoted to American women are too charming not to quote in full: "By the side of the preoccupied faces of the men," he says, "pass the women, gay, smiling, smart, true Parisians by their elegance and by their air, admirably gloved and coiffed, and wearing shoes of impeccable taste; wearing jauntily the latest fashions from our fine Paris; pretty, well-made, supple, with eyes gleaming with intelligence, the whole crowned with enormous hats placed proudly on the most beautiful heads in the world."

He refers to the American millionaires who should be called billionnaires he declares, in order to form any conception of their colossal fortunes. The tastes of these great magnates vary, some of them having their special train and their French chef at $10,000 a year; others practicing democratic simplicity, patronizing the omnibus and contenting themselves with a democratic beefsteak at a popular New York bouillon.

He concludes in saying that nothing is lacking to the Americans except a little ivy on some old wall to recall that the world does not date from yesterday. But this ivy, too, he says, one is in the act of fabricating, just as cobwebs are manufactured for wine merchants and restaurateurs.

APPEALED TO KING.

Five Spanish Chorus Girls in Distress Found a Knight Errant in Carlos of Portugal.

From Portugal comes a rather pretty story of five Spanish chorus girls appealing successfully to King Carlos for help, after finding themselves stranded at Lisbon through the disappearance of the manager and treasurer of the troupe to which they belonged, carrying with him all the cash. Their consul declined to do anything for them, and accordingly, they decided to appeal to the king. Their attempts to secure an audience by means of a letter proved fruitless, so they traveled out to Cintra, where he was spending the summer, and, taking advantage of the fact that the public are admitted to the royal gardens, remained concealed behind a bush until they saw the king approaching, whereupon all five burst suddenly upon him and surrounded him. Somewhat startled, the burly and enormously stout young king inquired of the ladies in what way he could oblige them. Whereupon they all began to talk and cry at once. Carlos had the utmost difficulty in ascertaining what was the matter, but as soon as he learned of their predicament he emptied the entire contents of his purse into their hands, bade them dry their tears, commenced chatting gayly with them, and finally shook hands with them all around, directing his side-de-camp to escort them to the railroad station and see that they were furnished with railroad tickets back to Madrid at his expense.

Headache

kills, not necessarily suddenly, but SURELY. It preys upon the intellectual powers more than we realize. It consumes the vitality faster than nature can replenish it, and we cannot tell just what moment a temporary or complete aberration of the mind will result. Headache and pain should be promptly removed—but properly. Many pain cures are more harmful than the pain. Beware. If you would be safe, take

Dr. Miles' Pain Pills.

They have also cured my daughter of nervous headache, and I heartily recommend them to others."—W. J. CORLEY, Bremond, Texas.
