AN OLD FIGUREHEAD

It Tells the Story of a Wreck and a Shilor's Romance.

The Carved Bust of Edith Lorne Still Rests at Baker's Bay, Wash., Its Time-Worn Bead Pointing to Scotland.

High up on a little platform in front of an old shack overlooking Baker's bay at Ilwaco, Wash., is an old figurehead. It leans forward as is characteristic with figureheads, and points toward Scotland. It is the form of a woman, a strong-faced, strong-armed woman, with rugged features and a stern expression. The figure is sawed off just below the waist, and this, too, is a part of the

More than 20 years ago, when the channel at the entrance of the Columbia was less known and more dangerous than now, the alarm was spread along the beaches at the entrance from the ocean among the lady from Boston." When, in the small population of fishermen that a station, every passenger had left the ship had gotten within the two-mile limit, and was drifting mercilessly to the sands. The people ashore signaled frantically to the sailors, and they, in desperation, signaled back, but they did not understand each other, and the ship went on to ifs doom. It soon lost the course of the channel, and a little later stuck its nose in the sand, and the heavy breakers drove it on and on until the hull was almost buried and she was filling with water. The men dared not risk their small boats in the foaming breakers, and they clung to the masts. The water rose higher and higher, and the vessel sank her nose deeper and deeper in the sand. The shipwrecked erew waved more frantically to the people on the shore, and the people on the shore waved more frantically back. But it was useless. At early dawn the following morning they were seen working about the deck, which was now high and dry above the water, but imbedded deep in the sand. The fishermen went to their rescue. Their

He was sent by the He played at all time with such com After the last load had been sent ashore the captain began to work on the figurehead.

"I must save this, at least," he said. He worked at it a long time. They are put on substantially. But he succeeded and brought it ashore. The following day he sailed for Portland, but before going he left the figurehead in the care of a fisherman, with the injunction that he should take good care of it until he called for it. "I shall try to take it with me on my return, but if I do not, will some day make this port and shall call for it,' he said.

But the captain took train to New York and sailed from there to his home. The old fisherman took the figurehead to his shack and kept it for many years-until his deathbut the captain of the vessel-it was the Edith Lorne-never called for his property. It became common property in the community. Its history opened my mouth was forgotten by all but a few. In the course of time it was carried from place to place as some one took a fancy to it. Then it was stolen. The fishing industry was now on a boom and a large number of men were employed there. The old shack used as a messhouse stood on a high eminence overlooking Baker's bay, The fisherman stole the figurehead from its last claimant and started to place it on a little platform high up in front of the shack. The figure was too tall, and they sawed it off below the waist, still giving it the forward inclination.

One day upon the arrival of the boat from Portland a gruff old Scotchman came. He saw from the wharf his figurehead adorning the shack of an "onery" land lubber, as he called it. A little closer, and he Distance Automobile company, Cardiscovered that his Edith had been desecrated by land lubbers. She had academy and home for shipbuilders, been sawed off below the waist. Ensiek, Fa., Has a Suspension Bridge Balle Upon an Efficiely New Principle,

Easton, Pa., has a new suspension foot bridge unlike any other bridge in the world. Among its oddities are the facts that it is 804 feet long and only ten feet higher than the south approach; it has two river spans instead of one, each 279 feet long; and it has a stair span that is 110 feet in length. This bridge stretches across the Lehigh river, the Lehigh Coal & Navigation company's canal, and the tracks of the Lehigh Valley railway. It is a toll bridge, built for a local company and designed by H. G. Tyrrell, a Boston

One of the great difficulties confrontng the designer of the bridge was the unequal elevation of the two ends of the bridge. To overcome this the floor is run down on a seven per cent, grade from the north bank to the river tower. From this point to the low end are four runs of stairs, the whole being suspended from the cables. On account of its having only a ten-foot roadway, which is narrow in proportion to its length, it was necessary to resist wind pressure by running guy ropes from the center of the two main spans to shore. The bridge has steel lowers resting on stone piers, which are built up to extreme high water evel. The height of the center tower from low water to the top of the saddle is 108 feet. Now the story goes that when the proposition to send the Oregon around Cape Horn was first talked over in the navy department a discussion arose regarding Capt. Clark's fitness for so important an undertaking. One of Secretary Long's advisers asked: "Has Clark persistency sufficient to see him |. through?"

"Persistency?" said a Clark advocate. "Did you ever see him play

No one present had save the man who spoke, but he went on to remark that anyone who took chess so seriously as Clark did could be depended upon to do his best proportionately in greater matters. Whether or not his advoeacy of the captain counted for anything does not certainly appear, but it is a fact that a few hours after this conference orders were sent to Clark to take the Oregon southward.
