How Diplomatic Transactions Are Guarded in England.

Disputches Are Carried by King's Messengers Who Are Shinderwed te Government Detectives While en Route.

Misgys much for the integrity of government officials, comments London Tit-Bits, that all knowledge of our recent important treaty with Japan was snowssfully withheld from foreign nations until the compact had been actually sealed, but the great care exercised in guarding a diplomatic secret renders a premature amnouncement very rare indeed.

No government secret when first born is ever committed to paper, excrot on the rare occasions when minutes of a cabinet meeting are telsen and forwarded to the severeign. As a rule, our ministers meet and tran-act misiness without anyone being the wiser, for no official of any kindin alhowed to be present.

Once the government has decided epon an important piece of foreign policy it has to be transmitted to our representative abroad, and for the first time the secret is put in writing in the form of intelligible cipher, the key to which is already in the hands of our ambassador. The men who draw up these intrience eighermodes are reliable officials specially emplayed by the government, and they fren obtain from £500 to £740 for a ample code.

The dispatch having been prepared, in is given into the care of a 'king's messenger, who wears attached to his person a bag fitted with a secret teck. To this lock there are only two keys: one in the possession of the foreign office and the other retained by our animassador, who must mulock the bag himself or instruct his secretary to do someon the messenger's arrival.

Father Dolling Who Preaches Amid Glitter and Splendor.

Yet He Lives and Works in the Mids of the Utmost Squalor and Most Grinding Poverty in the City of London.

It is rather hard to say for what Rev. Father Dolling, of London, who celebrated his fifty-first birthday the other day, is most famous. Probably it is not as an orator, although he is admittedly one of the best speakers in the church of England, or for his actual accomplishments, although few men in Great Britain have made a more striking success of their life work, but on account of the two seemingly contradictory elements in his make-up that are the strongest-his insistence of glitter, richness and splendor in all matters connected with worship and his preference to live and work in the midst of the utmost squator and the most grinding poverty to be found in

Then he turned down his cuffs and moved on. "What is the matter?" asked a friend. "Oh, he was angry," replied the minister, "because I saved a seat for a lady that he wanted for himself."
