People Believe It.

It has been cynically said that nothing can be sold by advertising in a day. This is not so. Many medicines have been advertised but only one—Perry Davis' Painkiller—has stood the test of sixty years. Today its popularity is greater than ever and is based not upon what anybody says but upon what it remedies does. There is but one Painkiller, Perry Davis'.

ABBEY'S EARLY LIFE

Famous Artist Was an Indolent and Careless Youth.

Finished Sketches Only When Necessity Knocked at the Door—Always Was Abstemious, But an Extravagant Dresser.

That success does not alter inborn character is proved to the satisfaction of C. R. Kelley, of Chicago, at all events, when he reflects on the habits and customs of Edwin Austin Abbey, R. A., and compares them with that famous artist's recent utterances.

Years ago, before Mr. Abbey ever thought to be selected to paint the coronation scene by royal command, he and Mr. Kelley roomed together, and the latter consequently had ample opportunity to study the painter's many idiosyncrasies.

That was 25 years ago, a time long enough to witness the one game on two continents as a mighty wielder of the brush—and to elevate the other to a high place in the ranks of Chicago republicans.

"I will remember Mr. Abbey as a youth of 18," said Mr. Kelley to a Chicago Chronicle reporter. "He was my roommate in Williamsburg then and seemed to spend more time in dreaming than in work. Often he would say to me: 'My board bill will be due to-morrow, and I must get out a sketch for Harper's tonight.' Then he looked over a pocket sketchbook in which he was continually jotting down what seemed to me to be mere lines, but to him incidents found in his daily life. Something would be selected and the next morning Harper's would hand him a check for $100 in return for it."

"Abbey found a sale for all the sketches he could do for Harper's Weekly, and much of his work found its way into the monthly. Yet while he was in receipt of a large income he seldom had any money and was indolent to the degree of being lazy.

"His money, however, was not spent with evil companions or in saloons, for I do not remember that I ever saw him take a drink or smoke a cigar. Instead, any article of wearing apparel that pleased him would be purchased without regard to price. Silk underwear, hose and fine furnishing goods were his hobby."

"His particular forte was in facial expressions, and I imagine that this specialty will be well brought out in his work on the 15 panels depicting the 'Search for the Holy Grail,' which he is working upon for the new Boston public library.

"I can see Abbey now as he used to appear to me in the old boarding house, sketching on a piece of cardboard with some 50 faces traced out under his skillful hand and no two of them at all alike. When he had finished he would sit back and laugh at his work."

"Abbey could always see something worthy of his pencil in the serio-comic side of life and this little notebook was full of such eccentricities. The value of his work was shown in a roving commission given him by Harper's to go abroad on a salary of $10,000 a year. Specimens of his early work may be seen in the draperies for the Vanderbilt library, for which it is said he received $50,000. I was not surprised to learn that he had been selected to paint the coronation scene, for I always believed him to be destined to become the greatest painter of modern times."

"This further reminds me," continued Mr. Kelley, "of his early hopes to some day attain the fame and money necessary to become a member of the famous Artists' club in New York. His marriage to Miss Gertrude Mead, of Greenwich, Conn., whom I had known as a child and who I had no knowledge that he had ever met, is another link in our lifelong acquaintance. While he was indolent in his early career, possibly a characteristic of Philadelphia birth, I believe his objection to living in America is due to a desire to study English home life and obtain greater conveniences for his art studies, for he is thoroughly American."

In a recent magazine a notable tribute is paid the American artist in the following terms:

"Saturated with English literature, domiciled in an English village, fond of English rural life, Mr. Abbey stands out as more British in sympathy and manner than the British themselves. In the coronation is his great opportunity."

CROWN PRINCESS MARIE.

Young Matron Who May One Day Be the Queen of Roumania is Popular in London.

It isn't every European country with a queen so genuinely popular as "Carmen Sylva" which is lucky enough to possess as promising a successor to her as Roumania does in its crown princess.

Prince Ferdinand's handsome wife, who was Princess Marie of Edinburgh, came to London with her husband to represent Roumania at the coronation, and her beauty, cleverness and general "style" have confirmed the belief of those who prophesied when the princess was a young girl in England that she would one day be a prominent figure among European royal women. She has reigned as one of the belles of the season.

When the princess and her husband arrived famous old Chesterfield house, which Lord Burton loaned to the king for the coronation season, was placed by his majesty at their disposal.

The crown princess and her greatest rival have been in London at the same time and they must have met often, for both of late have frequently been the guests of Queen Alexandra. The other lady in this case is the beautiful Helene Vaccarisco, the queen of Roumania's lady in waiting, whose enslavement of Crown Prince Ferdinand made such a to-do in King Charles' domain several years ago.

Dress is a great weakness with the crown princess of Roumania. At the reception recently given by the marchioness of Lansdowne to the Indian princes Princess Marie was the most noticed of the women. When she was married the crown princess trousseau was the most sumptuous ever provided for an English princess.

Besides being the niece of King Edward, Princess Marie of Roumania bears the same relationship to the czar of Russia, her mother, the duchess of Edinburgh, having been one of the Russian royal princesses. The crown prince and princess have an annual income of $150,000. This is by no means a regal sum, but it is spent lavishly.

one of the most eminent and influential jurists in the entire east. Judge Parker is in the very fullness of his mature manhood. He has just passed the age of 50, has served in the supreme court of the state and has taken just sufficient interest in practical politics to put him into touch with the various strata of his party. A native of Cortland, Judge Parker has lived altogether in the state, although he is well known in the city. He has been chief judge of the court of appeals since 1898.

The Czar's Elaborate Kitchen.

The czar's kitchen in St. Petersburg is the finest in the world. Its walls are of black marble, and are lavishly ornamented. Some of the kitchen pots and pans are of solid gold, and originally belonged to the Empress Catharine.

Pillar of Cloud and Fire.

The "burning mountain" of Montpel, in Aveyron, France, which is often mistaken for an active volcano because a pillar of cloud arises from it by day and a pillar of fire by night, is in reality a coal mine which has been burning for several years.
