HOW CORN ROOTS GROW.

Study of the Subject Proves That All Fertilization Should Be Through the Surface Soil.

It is by looking closely, and so reaching all the facts-in short, getting a scientific knowledge-that we make real progress in agriculture, as, indeed, in almost everything relating to nature. On the subject of the roots of eorn a writer in Up-to-Date evinces such a careful examination as we have indicated. He directs attention to the fine thread-like roots near the surface, us near as they can find both heat and a moist soil. These roots, he says, spread out horizontally and are almost certain to be destroyed or pruned by the cultivator shovels. As the plant develops and has more need for food a second set of horizontal roots are formed, larger than the others. These are the main feed roots of the plant, and in loose soil they grow five to seven feet long. If the condition of soil will permit, these roots will develop at such a depth below the surface as to be safe from the cultivator shovels. fine, cultivated soil to draw food from every particle, and only shallow cultivation will prevent injury to them.

Besides the two sets of horizontal roots as described, there are usually two or more sets, beginning at or near the base of the stalk as brace roots and go straight down into the subfour feet. These vertical roots have few fibrous roots attached, but serve an important end in being able to bring moisture from the deep soil, late in the season, when droughts are likely

As will be seen the roots of the corn an understanding of the root development suggests the method of fertilization which should be through all the surface soil, and not in the hill nor in the row only. The cultivation should be done so as not to interfere with the roots that want to occupy the ground prepared for them, yet at the same time prevent evaporation of the moisture by maintaining a surface mulch found not infrequently in the very of fine earth, by frequent shallow cul-

It is fastened to the pole by a six-inch piece of pipe passing tightly through a hole in the middle of the arm and fitting into the top of the ters worse, there was a deadlock in large pipe. The vines are cut back to two main branches each winter. The shoots which bear the fruit start each spring and are allowed to swing free, according to the principle of the Kniffin system, as in the illustration. The vines are cut back to the two arms each winter, new growth being substituted for the old arms at the same time. Vines so treated give a good crop, easily gathered and of very fine quality and appearance, and the training is less work than by almost any other method. Another advantage is that the vines may be cultivated in both directions with no wires to interfere Iron posts, too, do not harbor insects and fungus growth.-Orange Judd Farmer.

Get Rid of the Males. From the last of July to the middle of January a flock of hens do much better without males among them, and will continue to lay. They are generally quieter, and ramble over the fields less, while they also have more room and are better contented. Some people make a practice of saving all the eggs laid during September and October to put down in brine or some other preservative to keep for use when the snow flies. If they are carefully handled, stood on the small end, and kept in a cool place, they will keep several weeks without any pickle or preserving.-Farm and Fireside.

Correct Living Is an Art.

There is art in everything-even ir living on the farm-according to a well-known speaker at a recent meeting of a Michigan farmers' club. The farmer needs to study well the art of living, for of all men he is so situated as much as hash well made is a dish as to best take advantage of nature's aid in this direction. The speaker urged every farmer in the country to join a club, in which he could assist in promoting the social relations of his fellows and more thoroughly enjoy the relaxation and recreation to which he is entitled. This is a part of the "art of living" on the farm .- Chicago Daily Sun.

It is related in the east that two little girls were sent by some philanthroe institution to get their first giimpse of country life. They arrived late at night. The next morning they came out on the piazza for a view, of the vicinity. Great was their hostess' surprise when she saw that the two children looked upon the landscape and all its constituent parts with manifest disapproval. Determined to find out what was the matter, to fathom the workings of these juvenile minds, she sat down with them on the grass and drew them into a long, confidential talk. "What's the matter, children," she asked; "why are you disappointed with the country?" "Why, there's but as they branch out into numerous no grass here," said one, pulling a fine fibrous roots they actually fill the blade and biting the end of it. The woman could only gasp. "What's your idea of grant?" she asked at last. Little by little she managed to bring it out. Grass was about the height of a man, to begin with. "If this were larger, would it be like grass?" was the next question, and soil. They have been traced as deep as prompt "Oh, no!" showed that there was still more to be explained, "How is it different?" "Why, it's black," said one, "Black and white," said the other. Suddenly, the explanation flashed upon the "fresh-air lady's" mind. The little girls had plant develop as the top grows; also obtained their idea of vegetation solely from pictures they had seen in school-books or papers, ordinary black and white prints. The idea

Marriages must be rare events in Sturgeon, Mo., if one may judge from the eloquence with which a recent one inspired a local scribe. "The wedding," says the village paper, "as though a thunderboit had descended from a cloudless sky, was a great surprise to our people, and set the town to echoing and re-echoing the glad tidings." The courtship, too, was none of your modern commonplace wooings. Note: "Little Cupid, with a burnished arrow, at once commenced his matrimonial maneuvers. Homer, young, strong and ambitious, made a noble confession of love to the rosycheeked maiden of his choice and was accepted."

No one would have supposed that corned beef hash had magnetic attractions, but this hitherto unheardof quality is possessed by the hash which Senator Hanna's cook made in Washington during the last few weeks of the session of congress. That hash drew President Roosevelt. members of his cabinet and the leaders in the house and senate to Mr. Hanna's house for breakfast on the morning when the cook made it.
