MUSHROOM ON A TREE.

Remarkable, Especially, in That It Grew Out from Under the Bark of a Hard Maple.

A magnificent specimen of the Val- varia Bombycina growing on one of the trees in the yard of the Benjamin Harrison school attracted a great many people the other day.

This particular mushroom, aside from being exceptionally large, was remarkable in that it grew right out from under the bark of a large tree. Had the tree been an old and decayed one, the growth of the mushroom would not have been so much out of the ordinary...

MUSHROOM FREAK.

except for a small decayed strip of bark on one side. It was from this spot, about four feet from the ground, that the fungus grew. At the time of the taking of the picture the mush- room was not yet 24 hours old.

After the photograph was made the fungus was cut from the tree and taken to an authority on such sub- jects, who was asked to state whether it was a poisonous variety or not. After a brief inspection he diagnosed the specimen as a Valvaria Bombycina, an edible variety that is considered by naturalists to be one of the most beau- tiful mushrooms known. The speci- men was given the "authority," and he had his wife cook it. When he was seen the next morning he was enjoying the best of health, and wished to know where the tree was located that grew such palatable fruit.—Indianapolis News.

LITTLE LAND NEEDED.

Gardeners Make a Mistake When They Try to Cultivate Too Large a Tract.

Persons engaged in various industrial occupations often grow tired of them, and long to be gardeners and fruit growers in the country. One of the commonest mistakes is in regard to the quantity of land required. What they have in their minds probably nine times out of ten, is "buying a farm." But a large amount of land is not needed by the amateur horticulturist. In general farming, when land is to be devoted not only to tillage, but to meadows, pasture and woodland, it is different. Yet the majority of farmers have more land than they can possibly manage to the best advantage. Leaving out of the question commercial gardening and orcharding on a big scale by capitalists who use machinery and a large force of hired help, the best results from the kitchen and fruit garden are obtained from small areas intensively culti- vated. Your pair of hands must be de- pended upon mainly to do the work; the garden may often be expanded be- yond the proper limit.

It is easy for a gardener to plant much more in the spring than he can possibly well care for during the summer. Amateurs are often tempted to plant too much. It is not true that if a small garden, carefully cultivated, pays well, one several times its size, indifferently cared for, will be proportionately profitable. Small fruits are very exacting, and one person can care only for limited areas as they should be cared for. There is nothing in their restrictions and limita- tions deterrent to any one desirous of engaging in horticultural pursuits. A small amount of land can be obtained in the country for a small outlay. One can cultivate just such an area as his physical strength permits, making every inch of it equal to the finest gar- den, with profit and satisfaction.—S. B. Keach, in N. Y. Tribune.

LITTLE FRUIT NOTES.

Milking is a new apple, much like the Goldenstein, which is receiving some attention in Maine.

Kill the tent caterpillars while they are small and bunched—not half the work it will be after they scatter.

The cantaloup growers should save seed from the very best melons, for in this way only can the quality be maintained or improved.

Spring is a better time to set out trees than fall, but fall is better than not to set them at all, remarks one grower.

Mothtraps do more harm than good in the orchard and catch more friends than enemies, according to Missouri horticultural authorities.

Fertilizing the Orchard.

There is reason for believing that the orchard needs fertilizing even more than the ordinary field crops. A part of the fertilizing element of the latter is returned to the soil each year. The plant food that is taken up in the orchard is taken away from the soil forever. None is returned to it. It is estimated that in a single season an acre of apple trees will draw from the soil 49 pounds of nitrogen, 38 pounds of phosphoric acid, and 73 pounds of potash. These must be returned or the productiveness of the orchard will be lost.—Prairie Farmer.

It appears that Great Salt Lake, in Utah, is doomed.

Weather bureau officials announce that the waters of the Great Salt Lake are rapidly receding, and that unless there is a large increase in the rainfall of that region the lake must eventually dry up.

Local observers declare that even an increased rainfall would have no permanent effect in staying the drying-up process. The lake in the last ten years has receded seven or eight feet. Wet seasons do not seem to have made much difference, the receding of the waters going on steadily though slowly, year by year.

The lake is the great survivor of a large number of salt lakes, some of them much greater in extent. They flowed over a large part of the western and southwestern terri- tory, and left behind in some in- stances immense deposits of salt, which are now being converted to com- mercial uses. There are spots not so very distant from Salt Lake where almost pure salt can be dug up for many feet below the surface, and the vast alkali plains of the southwest were un- doubtedly covered with salt water at one time. It is supposed that Salt Lake was once a part of the ocean. The drying up of the lake seems a misfortune because the lake has so long been an object of interest and curiosity. It is really useful, however, more for the salt that can be extracted from its waters than on any other account, and these deposits can be more easily worked after the waters have subsided than now.

Syracuse, N. Y., has a common sense girl of whom it is justly proud.

Following a Lover's Suicidal Intent. She has pointed the way by which the love-lorn and suicidal swain may successfully be dealt with. It will no longer be necessary for reluctant young women to melt into the arms of ineligible young men in order to save them from self-destruction, or, in default of this, to suffer the blight of a damp, unpleasant memory during future years. The Syracuse young woman dismissed her betrothed for good and sufficient cause. The young man went home, gathered all the letters and gifts which he had received from her, wrapped them in paper fastened with blue ribbon, and fixed with a seal, and dispatched them to their source, together with a note in which he announced that he was about to die, mentioning the method by which he proposed to accomplish his taking-off. When she received the intelligence the strength of the common sense girl appeared. She did not scream, or have hysterics, or faint, nor yet did she fly to him, begging him to relinquish his dread intention on any terms. Not at all. She quietly handed the note to the messenger who brought it, with a request that he give it to the first policeman he met. The result was that the young man was arrested and lodged in jail, to await trial under the anti-suicide act.

A recent writer asks: "Would you advise a young man with $5,000 capital, intending to become a business man, to spend that sum first on a college education?" Certainly not, replies David Starr Jordan, president of the Leland Stanford (Jr.) university, writing in the New York Independent. Let him work in vacation and use only the interest of $5,000, and he will have both his education and his principal when he gets through. Because some foolish parents spend a sum like this each year on an effeminate or luxurious boy does not concern him. He can get a better education in the same college by his own unaided efforts. If our colleges insist that their students must get down to work or go home, we should hear less of lavish ex- penditure or of the complaint that colleges are for rich men only. It is the college where the students are poor that will some day have the rich alumni.

Pretty soon our libraries, books and all, may be entirely fire- proof. It is stated that ex- periments with aluminum as a substitute for paper are now under way in France. It is now possible to roll aluminum into sheets four-thousandths of an inch in thickness, in which form it weighs less than paper. By the adoption of suitable machin- ery these sheets can be made even thinner and can be used for book and writing paper. The metal will not oxidize, is practically fire and water proof and is indestructible by worms.

"Do not let girls warm your slip- pers," said a woman the other day to a daughter starting off to college; "and do not warm theirs." Thousands of happy girl friendships are about to be formed in our schools and colleges. They will be more lasting and helpful if conducted with a sense of propor- tion, and without too much odor of incense in the nostrils.

A short New York man asks for a divorce because his tall wife is ashamed to be seen with him.

All the colleges that have so far reported have promising football material.
