NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Recall from the study of a week ago what sort of a city Corinth was, and think of the many questions of practiapt to trouble a handful of Christians living in the midst of such a great paban eity. As a matter of fact this letter of Paul to the Christians in Corinth was a reply to a letter from them in which they had told him of their difficulties and asked his counsel. One of the questions they asked him was what to do about eating meat that had been offered before idols. The markets were full of it, for the priests could cat only a part, and sold the rest. Some held that it was wrong to eat it, for it seemed to them like taking part in heathen worship, and others held that it made no difference one way or the other. Those who did not cat looked down upon those who ate for indulging in what they considered questionable practices. Those who ate, believing that it was not a question of right and wrong at all, looked down on their brethren for being so superstitious as to think that the foolishness of offering a piece of meat before the statue of an imaginary divinity made it wrong to eat the beef. "Knowledge:" The letter to Paul had probably boasted "knowledge," and the broader of the two views ju W. K. Diehl and Knowledge is not to decide, but love. After the question, "What theory as to this meat is most reasonable?" is this other, "What course of action would be most kind and helpful?"

Heart, not brain, must decide. Paul clearly takes the side of the more liberal and broad-minded. Corinthians, and holds that the thing in it self is not wrong. Idols are nothing and the previous experience of the meat we cat has as little to do with the religion of Jesus Christ as the price we pay a pound for it. Paul would have his converts he liberal and enlightened; he would have them glory in the liberty they have in the Go-pel. "Howbelt:" Paul does not stop there. "There is not in all men that knowledge:" That insight, clearness and breadth of view which Paul and part of the Corinthians have attained.

Some of those who had been idelators were unable to shake off the freling skate." that in using meat that had been a part of an idolatrous ceremonial, just are you? as they had done before conversion.

they were compromising with idela- ald. try. They, too, knew that idols were nothing, but feit that this was wrong Conscience protested, and to disregard conscience is sin. "Take heed:" Broadminded freedom is good, but it must not make one forget to be kind; it does not justify selfishness. In theory, as he shows in the next chapter, Paul was most liberal, in practice, most conservative for the sake of others. In settling all questions of right and wrong conduct, now as then, there is the greatest need of charity, love, unselfishness. The Christian must not habies is triplets; four is quadrupe simply ask, "How does the matter look and five is centipedes."-Fit-Bits. to me? Would it do me any harm?" but he must ask, "What would be best for all concerned?" We may feel that it is best to give up some things for the sake of others-not that we are governed by their consciences, for we are not-but simply that the giving up might help them. It may sometimes seem best to wait. Paul knew that it was only a question of time and clear thinking when his ed? own liberal view should prevail. He was willing to wait. Right and reason are bound to win, and the Christian can better afford to have charity and wait than to ride rough-shod over even the unreasonable scruples of his breth-PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.
