The Effect of Music on the Organism.

That music has the same physiology effect or all persons, whether they know it or not, is the curious result of experiments in France by Messrs, Fere and Jaell. They conclude that all that is accomplished by musical culture is to make more perceptible to us the unconscious relations between music and the human organism.

Woman's Home Companion.

The April Woman's Home Companion contains a wealth of attractive features. "How an American Circus Astonished Europe" pictures the great Barnum actually invading kings' palaces. "A Picturesque Moravian Easter" tells of some quaint ceremonies in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania. "The Romance of Lincolu's Life" is reverently told, and in the "Great Movement" series the work of the Episcopal Church is pictured, Miss Gould's fashions are notable for heauty and timeliness. The articles on "Home Health-Exercises," "Floral Notes for April" and "Easter Games" are excellent and seasonable. In fiction the number is unusually strong. Eden Phillpotts' "The Farm of the Dagger" has an exciting instalment; "Ignis Fatuus," by Frederick M. Smith is an Easter "Betty" story, and "The Way of a Woman" is a humorous contribution by Paul Laurence coal region. Dunbar. MORE INDRSTRIAL EDUCATION.

While some educators are discussing the question of Greek or no Greek, others that of electives or no electives, and others that of a two or a four years' college course, it is gratifying to observe that the advocates of industrial they had ever seen. education are making steady and auspicious progress. true too largely in educational affairs. We have not paid too much attention to high senolarship in the Humanities. But we have paid too little to the promotion of the apparently humbler but certainly no less necessary branches of learning. It is well to teach the artist to paint, the musician to play, the poet to write, the meta-physician to reason. But there is much good, too, in teaching the smith to forge, and the weaver to weave, and the joiner to make his woodwork strong and true. We cannot all be brainworkers. The great majority must be toilers with the hand as well, though they, too, work with the brain.

Coal at Selinsgrove Junction.

There is every indication that a large anthracite coal breaker will be put in operation at Selinsgrove Junction, eight miles from the present

Practical miners are at work sinking a shaft to work a six foot vein of excellent quality, and the land owners and citizens for miles around are anticipating a new era of prosperity for this section.

The breaker is being crected on the farm owned by Mrs. George Long. Two practical miners visited the place last week and pronouncel the surface indications the most promising
