How to Destroy Ants.
Make holes with a 1/2-inch or 3/4-inch hole, from the hole to the nest, and about 1/2 inch apart, over the ground infested by the ants, and mix each pair two or three teaspoons of bicarbonate of carbon, stamping the dirt into the hole as soon as the liquid is poured into it. The bicarbonate of carbon at once evaporates, and permeating the ground between the ants, they will die in large numbers. One should be careful while using this substance, as it is a highly inflammable and caustic material. It is a flame or better than kerosene.—H. L. Kver, in Entomology.

CHOICE CHEESE IN CANS.
Experiments Recently Completed Are Sure to Cause a Change in Existing Methods.

Are we yet to eat canned cheese? The answer appears to be in the affirmative. We have at various times noted the advance being made along this line from the introduction of the submergible can, by which the temperature of curing rooms was regulated, to the discovery of galactose by Prof. Russell, at the Wisconsin experiment station. The discovery of this unorganized ferment upset all the previous ideas of the process of cheese ripening. It had been supposed that both air and a warm temperature were needed to insure proper ripening. It was found that this ferment would act even below the freezing point, and though deprived of air. This immensely broadens the base on which to work, for it is no longer necessary to have curing rooms of uniform conditions. Neither is it necessary to hold to the traditional packages. The Oregon station has recently undertaken and partly completed some experiments that are certain to have a large influence in shaping future practice. Under the conclusion that cheese could now be made in almost any form it was determined to can it. Tins holding from one to five pounds were used, being first coated inside with paraffin to prevent tainting from the tin. The curd was packed in the tins under pressure and was permitted to remain over night. Then each can was covered and made airtight. After about four weeks the cans were opened and the cheese tested. It was found to be excellent in flavor and of smooth, even texture. The cheese thus made has the advantage of being moldless. Moreover, it loses no weight through evaporation of moisture. Certainly there are great times ahead for the cheesemakers. When families can buy a pound or five-pound can of cheese it will become one of the standbys of the housewife and should become immensely popular as a staple article of diet.—Farmers Review.

SALT BOX FOR STOCK.
Its Cover Closes by Gravitation and Animals Quickly Learn How It is Opened.

Even so simple a thing as a salt box is a source of much satisfaction if made a little better than others of the kind. The one illustrated was first suggested to me some time ago and has been improved till it fills the bill. The board at the back is 10 inches wide and about four feet long. The sides of the box are nailed directly onto this board, and the top of the box is joined to the board by strap iron hinges, which are better than leather. The end piece inside the box, and next to the board, does not quite reach the board, and the bottom of the box, being nailed to the end piece, also does not reach the board. Thus rain running down the long board cannot get into the box and soak the salt. The board is nailed to a building, tree or fence wherever wanted. The support in front is a stake driven into the ground and fastened with a nail to the projecting bottom of the box. Animals soon learn to open the cover and help themselves. The cover closes by gravitation.—H. H. Hershley, in Farm and Home.

Oleo Makers Are Active.
The dairyman who thinks that the oleo makers are going to stop securing oleo without making a vigorous attempt to find a method that the law will not forbid is very much mistaken, says Hoard's Dairyman. Ever since the law was passed all the skill of some of the best chemists in the country has been at work on the question of finding a natural color for oleo. At one time palm oil seemed to furnish what was wanted and a color that the analyst could not identify. But when one analyst puts together another one can usually pull apart, and a method of identifying the palm oil color has been found, and the successful manufacture of unadulterated oleo is still in the distance.

War on Canada's Insects.
Canadian thistles can be effectively destroyed by covering several inches deep with a heavy mulch, which they soon in small numbers only. Any thin mulch will do, but it should be applied liberally in order to smother out the weeds effectually, say from six to ten inches deep. But when large areas are covered with thistle, muling is not practical, and in all such cases we find that clean culture is the most effective method of destroying same.—Farm Journal.
