Poet's Corner.

WHERE ARE THEY.

Where are the men who marched at night

About four months ago?

Each with a banner or a light

A grand, inspiring show,

Who "hoped to march to Dixie's land,

Each with a musket in his hand,

To slaughter all the rebel land!"

About four months ago.

Where are the men who drove fast teams

About four months ago?

Who showed their zeal by shouts and screams,

And made the whiskey flow;

Who made their patriotic boasts

That they would "crush the rebel hosts,

Or die, like heroes at their posts,"

About four months ago.

Where are the men who swayed the crowd

About four months ago?

Where speeches were so long and loud

And bright with martial glow,

Who wore small medals on their coats,

And had their pocket full of notes

To buy up Democratic votes,

About four months ago.

The draft is coming—where are those Who bragged four months ago?

Why don't they march to meet their foes

And "crush them at a blow?"

Abs calls, but, ah! they answer not!

They do not fancy being shot!

Their blood has cooled, which was so hot

About four months ago.

[From all The Year Round]

BULL FIGHT AND ITS CONSEQUENCES.

I looked up at the endless tiers of spectators,

The ladies, with their flashing eyes and waving fans, some in the old Spanish dress, but most in Parisian finery, at the dandies of Malaga; the crowds of shopkeepers and artisans; whole families together, from the deglighted old grandfather to the children in arms, that was being taught to clap its little hands and crow at the sight of bloodshed; at the multitudes of peasants in holiday attire such as their ancestors wore in the days of Ferdinand and Isabella. I gave a glance to the place where the captain-general in his rich uniform blazing with decorations, sat amid a brilliant group of officers and ladies, whose diamonds and courtly splendor seemed oddly placed in such a scene. And then I looked down at the ring.

And yet the sport had been merely of an introductory character. Three or four young bulls had been worried by tridents and flags

"A craven" as those pacific animals are called whose temper is known to be meek, had been tormented with squibs, barbed darts, and the incessant braodishing of red scarfs before his eyes, and had finally been dispatched by Choco, who did what may be called the comic business of the theatre.—And now a fine bull, with wide spreading horns, was in possession of the ring. This animal, however, disappointed the amateurs of the arena by showing more desire to escape than to fight.

He ran round and round seeking an outlet and bellowing piteously, as the active torreadors on foot, with banners and scarfs, ran nimbly around, taunting and teasing him until his hide was like a picouchn stuek full of tiny barbed darts, adorned with colored paper. Of this, too, the people grew weary, and a general shout arose.

"Toros! toros! the Murican bull at once

No, the Portuguese! Let the English matador show us what he is made of. Toros!"

The manager looked up appealingly to the Captain-General, and, receiving an august nod of permission, bustled out. Very soon there was a flourish of trumpets, and then, amid clapping of hands and huzzing of countless voices, the brindled Murican bull came at a heavy canter into the ring, stooped short, lifted his head, and gave a loud roar of impatience. A noble beast he was, and the populace enthusiastically shouted forth their comments on his tossing man, his deep chest, his dauntless look, the strength of his limbs, and the sharpness of his horns. Then to the sound of martial music, in poured the still the wretched steeds went reeling round the ring until loss of blood made them drop down on the ensanguined sand. And still the music played its most stirring strains, and still the people shouted, while the ladies waved fans and handkerchiefs in token of applause, and all the gory savagery of the Spanish national sport went on with sickening repetition. At last, nine horses being dead or frightfully injured, two picadors having been bruised by falling against the oak-barriers, and the bull being much spent, the remaining horsemen left the ridge. Ropes and hooks were fastened to the carcasses of the slain horses, and they were dragged away, and fresh sand and sawdust were thrown down.

It was time for the matador to appear.

"Now, Englishman, they are waiting for you. Remember the thrust and be cool," whispered the manager. He led me into the ring, and I made my bow to the Captain General and to the audience, while the manager, with much grandiloquence, presented me to the public as "Don Enriquez, of London, the distinguished volunteer, who had so kindly undertaken to fill the office of the eminent Manuel Zagal." Scarcely had he finished this speech before the bull began to advance and my introducer hastily retired.

I stood alone in the ring, my heart beating quickly, and a red film seeming to obscure my dazzled eyes, while the clamor of the crowd and the consciousness that I was the mark on which thousands were gazing in pitiless expectation almost unnerved me. I had faced danger before, but not in such a shape, and I am not ashamed to own that for a moment my knees felt strangely weak, and my pulse fluttered like a bird over which the hawk hovers. Then came back the thought of Alice, and I was myself once more. Disregarding the spectators, I bent my whole attention on the bull, which was slowly
