Bates drove the bottled-aled wagon. Gates drove the mineral-water wagon. Bates was short, fat, and red. Gates was tall, slim, and white. Bates was enterprising.

So was Gates. Bates drove out of the city, and supplied taverns along the road.

And so did Gates. Bates despised mineral-water.

Gates despised bottled ale.

Now, it happened that as they often met on the road, each considered that the other supplied his customers, and the supplies of the other terded to undermine his own.

Entertaining a feeling of rivalry on this account, for a long time, when they drove by each other, they scowled and coughed defiantly, and at last they came to hostile words for, one day, they chanced to meet Widow

Bluejay's at the same time, and lugged in their latter are the same time, and lugged in the same time, and the same time time, and the same time time time time time. their bottles together. Here was proof pesi tive that each did supply the other's custom-

"The more ale people drink," argued Gates, "the less mineral water they want. That injures me.

"The more mineral water, the less ale they call for," argued Bates. "I don't like that." The next time they met on the road neither would turn out; they drove into each other, and there was a jar of bottles and bad language.

Bates now told Gates that the next time he caught him carrying any more of his minhe caught him carrying any more of his mineral-water to Widow Bluejay's he'd thrash him. And Gates said if Bates toted in any more state ale, and he was by, he would be was by the work at 5.50, in Philadelpei at 6.30, and in Harrisburg at 8.20 P. M. smash him

Fach thought he had scared the other out of that; but, a few days after. Bates and Gates again met there, and sat down scowling While each was angrily musing on the prospect of a fight, to determine the fortunes of pect of a fight, to determine the fortunes of ale, and mineral water at that place, two young men entered and stood at the bar.

One called for bottled ale-" had got over his last spree by drirking mineral-water," he said, "and was now ready to go into ale again."

The other called for mineral-water-"he was thirsday, having drunk so much ale yesterday."

Being told, "We're just out of each," they left-one declaring, if he couldn't get ale, and the other, if he couldn't get mineral water, he would not drink at all.

"Sorry my wagon is empty," said Bates. "Sorry mine happens to be," said Gates. Each looked at the other, irresolutely, for a moment, when some good spirit came down and made peace between them-it was Irlsh whiskey, proffered by the many jewelled hand of Widow Bluejay herself. "Ha, ha!" laughed Bates, looking up at mineral water.

"Hs, ha!" laughed Gates, locking down at ale.

"We're on an even footing-and necessary to each other."

"I make thirst____ "And I quench it."

From that day ale and mineral water popped corks together harmoniously.

"Paddy, honey, will you buy my watch?" "And is it about selling your watch ye are, Mike ?"

"Troth it is. darlint."

"What's the price ?" "Ten shillings and a mutchin of the crea ture." "Is the watch a dacent one ?" "Sure, and I've had it twenty years and it never once desayed me."

"Well, here's your tin, and now tell me does it go well ?" "Bedad, an' it goes faster than any watch in Connaught, Munster, Ulster or Leinster, not barring Dublin ,'

"Cad luck to ye, Mike then you have taken me in. Didn't you say it niver desaved ye ?"

"Sure an' I nid ; nor did it, for I never de pended on it."
