

Miscellaneous. FLYING FISH.—We were running down from Barbadoes and the lady passengers were admiring the beautiful flying fish, when one turned to Jack Lacy, who had the wheel and inquired: "Jack, do these beautiful fish ever grow any larger?"

"Why, yes, marm. Down there at the Cape Verdes, they grow as large as that man marm."

"Indeed! And do they fly like these?" "Not 'zactly, marm. They flies longer and higher. Some on 'em fly just like eagles all day, and more'n two miles high. One day Bill Fawcett was sleopin' up in the foretop, with his dinner port wide open and one of 'em Cape Verdes flew right down his throat!"

"Why, Jack, that was singular. A fish as long as that manmast flying down a man's throat?" "Beg your pardon, marm, can't talk much at the wheel. I speck Bill must ha' stretch ed like blazes, or else my yarn has."

How PADDY WON HIS POTTEEN.—Paddy Mallene belonged to Capt. M's company in a certain Rhode Island regiment. Capt. M. liked an occasional dram himself, and therefore could not consistently deny his men that in which he himself indulged.

One day when Paddy was on guard, he felt "thirty," and seeing his captain approaching, accompanied by a lady, he resolved to present arms, a salute which he had no right to offer to any one but the officer of the day, or a field officer.

Accordingly, when Capt. M. reached Paddy's post, the latter carried his resolution into effect, when, instantly halting, the officer angrily exclaimed: "Why do you present arms to me, sir?—You know that I am not the officer of the day."

"I beg yer pardon, sir," returned Paddy, obviously, "it is not to yerself, sir, it is to the fine-looking lady wid ye, shure, that I presented arms."

Paddy got his whisky as soon as relieved.

THE IRISH SAILOR AND THE CAPTAIN'S COPPER KETTLE.—Differ't people attach differ't meanings to the same word. An Irish sailor allowed the captain's copper kettle to slip from his hand into the sea; but being a witty fellow, and knowing the captain to be a good humored man, said, addressing him, "would you say that a thing was lost, sir, if you knew where it was?" "Of course not," was the captain's reply. "Well, sir, your copper kettle is at the bottom of the sea."
