LOCAL COURT.

Shakespeare's Hamlet, with Hamlet left out does not make a very strong tragedy, similarly a lawsuit tried in the court of Squire Hay last evening without the presence of John Noditch lacked the principal character in the settlement of a question involving the ownership of eight gallons of beer.

The story of the dispute is something like this: Monday was a very warm day, and two sets of foreigners in the vicinity of Boynton thirsted for that cooling drink and these men had no desire for the beer that made Milwaukee famous, not Pabst's blue ribbon beer but Meyersdale beer, the beer that big-hearted and popular John Hartung superintends in the brewing.

Two men contributed a dollar a piece for eight gallons of this beer, John Moditch was sent to purchase the beer at the brewery. Instead of buying eight gallons, he purchased four gallons. Frank Robusky was also very thirsty the same evening, also from the vicinity of Boynton, he also came to town with his own money purchased eight gallons of beer for $2.25. Both parties left Meyersdale on the 8:20 car and at Boynton both parties got off the car and the beer likewise. John Moditch, who had been sent to buy eight gallons with other people's money and had bought only four gallons, laid claim to the eight gallon keg, and John and his companions got possession of it, while for the time being Frank, the prosecutor, did not have any, and Frank brought suit for larceny and assault and battery.

The four gallon keg had been left on the road at Bauman's store for some time, but later the John Noditch party evidently had use for the four gallons in addition to the eight gallons which belonged to Frank Robusky. Many witnesses were heard and the fact was brought out that Frank lost the beer for which he paid and John's companions drank beer which belonged to Frank Robusky. John Smith represented the commonwealth. Davy Brandt, represented the defense and acted as court interpreter. Nearly half a hundred people had assembled at the seat of justice.

The charges of assault and battery and larceny against the companions of John Noditch were not sustained.

The court decided that those companions of Noditch pay the price of the beer $2.25 and that they divide the costs of the trial among themselves, amounting to $23.36. The said amount to be collected from John Noditch.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE BAND.

At last the time has arrived when the band is to receive help and encouragement of a financial character from the citizens, in the entertainment which is being staged for them. An enjoyable evening will doubtless be in store for all who attend the entertainment and in addition the larger the crowd the more the band will be helped.
