MINER ENTOMBED EIGHT DAYS.

Thomas Tospesky, who was entombed in the Confinement mine of the Lehigh Valley Coal Company, Centralia, Pa., was rescued on Saturday morning at 7:25 o'clock after eight days' confinement under the ground. When brought to the surface his pulse registered 72 and his temperature was normal, a condition which the physicians consider little short of remarkable.

The dazzle of the sun's rays had a peculiar effect upon Tospesky. He stared for an instant and then fell into the arms of Mine Inspector O'Donnell. He shrieked with joy when he saw his wife and children and fell on his knees praying. He was taken home and put to bed for a long needed sleep.

The rescue of Tospesky is a feat unparalleled in anthracite mining. Other men have been rescued after being entombed but never before was one kept alive by administering stimulants to him through a tube from the outer world.
