

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special to The Commercial.

By his request to Representative Clayton to keep out of the Senatorial race in Alabama, President Wilson has shown that consistency is not always a paramount consideration with him and that he will not permit it to be invoked to prevent him from action which he considers necessary. The President's interference in the Alabama case presents a number of interesting phases. Mr. Clayton was the chief opponent of Representative Underwood, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in the House. Mr. Underwood has worked in close harmony with the President in the preparation and passage of the Wilson-Underwood tariff bill. It is natural that the President should feel under substantial obligation to Mr. Underwood for the great service rendered in the House on the tariff. It was Mr. Underwood's personal strength among his colleagues which on one or two occasions prevented the more radical Democrats from amending the tariff bill in caucus in a way that would have been decidedly displeasing to the President. Mr. Underwood has announced his candidacy for the Senate and his presence in the upper house would undoubtedly be of material assistance to the President. The fight over the currency bill has already demonstrated that the President's control in the Senate is dangerously narrow. The addition of a strong man like Underwood to the Democratic group in the Senate that is willing to act wholeheartedly in accord with the President will be of material assistance to the White House in pushing its legislative program.

The New Jersey situation is so complicated as to present a very puzzling proposition to the President and to make interference by him dangerous. Mr. Wilson strongly supported Governor Fielder in his canvass for the Democratic nomination. But once nominated, Governor Fielder has given several indications of a willingness to deal with the Smith-Nugent faction, the bitterest enemies of the President. It was Mr. Wilson's fight against Smith and Nugent, the old-line bosses of the Democratic machine in New Jersey, which gave him his chief prominence as a candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination. Now, with Fielder, his nominee for the governorship, going back on him and trafficking with Smith and Nugent, the President is put in an extremely awkward position in his own state. This awkwardness was emphasized by the overwhelming defeat of the President's candidate for the chairmanship of the Democratic state committee of New Jersey and the election of the Smith-Nugent candidate.

The President faces a three angled problem. He can continue to support Fielder and thus be brought into working co-operation with his old antagonists, the Smith-Nugent crowd, with its obviously damaging results. Or he can keep out altogether, which is the least troublesome, and also the least creditable course. This is the one which he apparently has elected to follow.

The President's call upon Mr. Clayton does not take the form of a direct request to keep out of the Senatorial race in Alabama. And he bases this request upon the proposition that Mr. Clayton as chairman of the Judiciary Committee will be a power hereafter in handling the legislative program on trusts and corporations, which the President intimates will shortly come before Congress.

Protecting Trees From Rabbits, and Mice

The old subject of protection of young orchards during the winter from injury by rabbits and mice is one that constantly recurs at the office of State Zoologist H. A. Surface, Harrisburg. To an earnest inquiry from Wayne county, Pa., Professor Surface again replies with practical information as follows:

If I had small trees that were threatened with injuries from rabbits during the winter, I should certainly shoot, trap or poison the rabbits. In case this is not done, I would make wire tree protectors by bending galvanized wire of one-fourth or one-half inch mesh, so that it forms a tube the height of the trunk of the tree, or at least equal to the full depth of the average snow in the region, and put this wire tree protector around the tree like you would use an open ring. The woven wire protectors made of galvanized material may be left on the trees if you do not bind them too tightly, or, better, they can be stored in the spring for further use. I prefer wire to wood.

If such wire protectors are sunken into the earth while it is yet unfrozen, they may materially aid in helping also to protect the trees from mice. However, in my own practical orcharding I use no protectors. I use and recommend to others the application of the boiled lime-sulphur solution, applied as a wash either with a brush, or with a spray pump, with a coarse nozzle or with out any nozzle. The lime-sulphur solution can be made the same as for the San Jose scale, and in the order to give it some body some free sulfur may be added. The first application should be made shortly after the first snowfall, and this should be repeated two or three times during the winter. To aid in keeping away mice the earth should be mounded around the trees to a height of four or five inches, and the lower end of this wire protector sunk into the earth around the top of mound around the tree. The spraying is better than the wire protector, because if the snow is deep rabbits will be able to feed above the protector.
