Fall Removal of Peach Borers.

A Pennsylvania fruit grower wrote the State Zoologist H. A. Surface, Harrisburg, and asked, "Is it advisable to take the borers out of peach trees at this time of year? I have a two year old orchard twelve hundred trees. I took the worms out of five hundred, when I was told that to dig around them in the fall would cause them to freeze. Please advise me."

Prof. Surface replied as follows: "It is best to take borers out of peach trees at this time of year. I make a regular practice of going over my orchard in the fall of the year, removing the gum from around the trees, and removing by hand any borers that are beneath the bark. You will find that a large percentage of the borers in the fall of the year are only beneath the mass of gum, feeding at the surface of bark, and have not yet gone beneath, and are thus removed by the removal of the gum. As I worked with my men in the orchards one Saturday recently in order to watch this carefully, I decided that ninety per cent. of the borers were thus removed. What is more these little fellows that vary from one-fourth to one-half inch in length at this time of year will live during the winter and commence to feed early in the spring by midsummer they may kill the trees they infest, especially the small trees."

"I used a V-shaped hoe, with a small blade as I can find, or cut down a larger hoe, so the little trench around the tree will not widen. I then wash the base of the tree with boiled lime-sulfur solution, or spray it with this material, and leave it open for a few days to see if any borers remain. If they are present their signs will be shown by the grain of sawdust-like material in the gum coming from the holes where they are concealed beneath the bark. They should be removed by hand, using a knife blade, and cutting the bark lengthwise, but not crosswise. After they are removed they can be mounded to a height of three or four inches, so that water and ice will not settle in the trenches around the crowns. This also gives protection from mice, and is the finishing touch of the fall orchard work. The next step is the pruning and winter spraying, which can be undertaken at any time after most of the leaves are off and continued during the winter whenever the weather is favorable.

"The person who told you that digging around the trees in the fall would cause them to freeze did not bear in mind the refilling of the trenches with earth. It would no doubt be injurious to peach trees to have their roots exposed during the winter time, as I have known some orchards to be killed by the freezing of the roots. Here is one of the places where the benefits of a cover prepare to be seen. There is so much in orcharding that it can not all be given in one letter. We shall be pleased to answer further inquiries along this or other lines."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special to The Commercial.

John Purroy Mitchel of New York will say that the Progressives solely were responsible for his nomination by the fusion committee. For two years McAneny, a Democrat, had labored for the fusion nomination. The standup Republican organization solidified its forces behind District Attorney Whitman, who later, running for re-election, received the endorsement of Tammany. At the psychological moment the Progressives sprang the name of Mitchel and he was nominated by the fusion committee. It was the earnest enthusiastic support of the Progressives which made Mitchel's election possible. The New York Mail, a Progressive newspaper, published the Sulzer revelations showing the attempts of "Boss" Murphy to compel a man elected to the governorship to turn the state over to the grafters.

Nor was the majority the only victory achieved by the Progressives in New York state. 23 Progressives were elected as members of the general assembly, and 20 candidates, Republicans and Democrats, who were swept into office enjoyed Progressive endorsement. This fusion was necessary in order to defeat either Murphy's men or Barnes' men and to wrest control of the legislature from this infamous alliance.

Turn to the states where the issues were clear-cut, where the struggle lay between the progressives on the one hand and the two old parties on the other. Staid, conservative Massachusetts, assumed to be the very hearthstone of staidness, is slowly but surely taking its place in the Progressive column.

Think of it! The Progressive candidate for governor actually polled more votes in 1913 than he polled in the Presidential campaign of 1912.

Think of it! Both the old Democratic and Republican parties polled less votes in 1913 than they did in 1912.

Here are the figures to prove it. In 1912 the Progressive candidate polled 122,602; in 1913, 126,067; a gain of 4,065. In 1912 the Republican candidate polled 143,597; in 1913, 116,314; a loss of 27,283. In 1912 the Democratic candidate polled 193,184; in 1913, 180,368; a loss of 12,816.

In Massachusetts, as in New York, the Progressives will hold the balance of power in the assembly, and should an accident occur in the senatorial representation it will be the Progressives who will be able to name the man that shall represent the Old Bay State in the United States Senate.

While Everett Colby, the Progressive candidate for governor, received only 45,000 votes in New Jersey, the fact must not be lost sight of that the new party ran counter in that state to the heaviest kind of odds. Colby's vote would have been largely swollen had not many Progressives feared that Stokes, the Republican candidate, might win. Stokes sought to confuse the issue by declaring that he had always been for Roosevelt and that he was really a "progressive" Republican. Both the Democrats and Republicans in New Jersey had a large campaign fund, that of the Republican totaling a quarter of a million dollars, as opposed to a paltry fifteen thousand dollars at the disposal of the Colby committee.

The Progressives sought to defeat Stokes by polling about 40,000 votes. They succeeded.
