ISSUE IS ILLEGAL

$67,500,000 MORGAN-NEW HAVEN DEAL UPSET BY SUPREME COURT.

COMMISSION WITHOUT POWER

Bay State Supreme Bench Bars Debenture Issue and the Banking Firm Will Lose Commission Amounting to $1,687,500.

Boston, Jan. 10.—The Supreme Court of Massachusetts declared illegal the issue of $67,500,000 6 per cent. convertible debentures proposed by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad.

The decision deprives J. P. Morgan & Co. of the $1,687,500 (2½ per cent.) commission they were to get for underwriting the issue.

This news came to Chairman Howard Elliott and his colleagues on the New Haven Board while they were in session at the Grand Central Terminal offices, New York, preparing to compromise the dissolution order of the Federal authorities.

The decision leaves the New Haven for the time being without the means of meeting $45,000,000 in short-time notes which fall due May 18.

These notes are held by J. P. Morgan & Co., Kidder, Peabody & Co. and Lee, Higginson & Co., of Boston.

It was reported that anticipating an adverse decision Chairman Elliott had secured a pledge from these bankers that the notes would be renewed for three years and his administration financed for that period.

Even if the $45,000,000 of maturing debts is taken care of, the New Haven will not have the $22,000,000 with which it had hoped to buy modern equipment.

THE DANCING CROWD IN NEW YORK

Short Dresses the Rule, Narrow Trains Made to Catch up at One Side, Not to Impede the Tango.

SHO (T) DRESSES THE RULE

No doubt this craze is responsible for the fact that almost everyone is wearing either short dresses, or little whips of trains, that are made to catch up at one side into the draperies, quite out of the way when dancing is indulged. This fashion like many others net designed for her benefit, is turned to account by the woman whose few gowns must do service for many occasions. A black satin frock that is short and practical enough to be worn on foot in the street, under a smart warm coat when that garment is put off, emerges, with a dainty transparent bodice, and fish-tail train, draped at a touch from its concealed fastening. Black taffeta is exceedingly smart just now for afternoon wear, and all the colored taffetas including changeables follow a close second. White and the paler tints are regulated to gas light as a rule, though a long all enveloping wrap makes even these go at the popular afternoon tea dances.

TRANSFORMATION GOWNS.

"Transformation gowns" is an apt name for dresses that, worn with a gamp are suited for afternoon wear and without this separate appendage, are correct for evening occasions. A number of excellent models for such frocks are to be had and most of them are easy to construct.

FASHIONABLE WRAPS.

Supple wraps of fur in dolman or coat form are the choice of the woman who understands the art of good dressing. These if of seal, broadtail or ermine are quite out of reach of the woman who spends moderately for her dress but there are beautiful coats to be had reliable pelts, made up in latest styles at very moderate figures now that January prices prevail.

At C. C. Shayne & Co's., where I usually go to get the latest news of fur fashions, I saw beautiful coats of sable squirrel, and of soft gray minkskin that anyone would be proud to wear, marked at figures that make their possession easily possible. Many of the coats of dyed muskrat which looks exactly like seal and wears as well, were so smartly made and beautifully lined that they were quite as attractive as the more costly furs. Sets of scarf and muff in this same muskrat are in excellent style, suited to maid or matron and are not in the prohibitively expensive class.

VESTS AND GIRLDES.

Small lengths of brocade that can be picked up at the prevailing January sales make effective vests to freshen and smarten winter suits. Some of the prettiest now have collars attached that turn over the jacket engaging just in front of the shoulder line, after the fashion familiar in trimmings.

Wide girldes or brocade, Roman stripe or plaided silks are similarly useful to transform a plain frock.
