

Fashions and Fads.

The fan should match the evening oilette or emphasize a distinctive color note.

Hats with flower trimming and edges of fur are worn by many smart women.

Flowered and printed designs on white mousseline de soie make very pretty blouses.

Popular and elegant are the hats of dark fur with narrow, close brims in turban shapes.

It is said that the jackets of the new spring suits will reach barely to the hips.

Shoes of patent leather and kid are most favored, and heels have a tendency to be very low.

Some dainty evening frocks are made of chiffon finished with taffeta, trimmed with lace flouncings.

The smart thing in fur is the extra long scarf, made from two or four different kinds of fur.

Sweaters have found their way into fashion's favor and are being worn in the country with suits of various colors on overskirts of dull brown and blue.

Simplicity is the keynote of the smartest afternoon gowns.

Waffle checks are one of the newest weaves in cloaking materials.

Fashion indicates the return of ruffles for spring and summer.

The gown that is shirtwaisted in the back has gone out of fashion.

In evening gowns the neck line is cut square, pointed or heart shaped.

The rough coat suit with a mannish air has passed out of existence.

Evening wraps are fastened with huge clasps of barbaric workmanship.

It is rumored that buttoned shoes will be most worn the coming spring.

The darker the suit the brighter should be the color used for the blouse.

There is a disposition among the furriers to bring the small muffs into fashion.

Some of the most fashionable women are again wearing large picture hats.

Girdles are very important accessories to the costume, and they are made in all styles and sizes and of every material.

The big muff must have on it a large bunch of flowers. They should be at the front, side, near the center or near one corner.

The skirt of the fashionable garments must not fit. It is draped, usually gathered around the waist and is met by a baggy blouse.

There is a slight change in the shape of the back of the collarless blouse. They are higher in the center front and lower on the shoulders.

Fashion has taken a fancy to light-colored suits. The tones known as cafe au lait, biscuit, string, oyster, a pale pink have appeared in coats and skirts.

One of the most satisfactory possessions a woman can have in her wardrobe is the one-piece frock of thin blue serge with a loose surplice blouse and a long turnover white muslin.

The Good Old Dollar Bill.

There are tellings of old glory, In picture, song and story, And they say it is the emblem of our land;

It's a grand old flag they holler But the real flag is the dollar; When your lip against, then you'll understand.

We respect the flag and love it, But the dollar floats above it, When you've got it no one ever treats you mean;

Money talks but seldom battles And in all life's weary battles; It's the only flag of truce, worth while; the old long green.

Praise the stars and stripes forever, And the old red, white and blue; Rave about the flag of freedom and old Hail Columbia too;

Shout the praises of old glory, But when you go through the mill, Then the real "Star Spangled Banner" is the good dollar bill.

REFUGEES MARCH

ROUTED FEDERALS FROM OJINAGA TRUDGE TO MARFA ESCORTED BY U. S. CAVALRY.

SIX GENERALS RIDE AT HEAD

Self-Exiled for Square Meal—Texas Caravan Swelled by 906 Brave, but Hungry Mexicans—Many Native Women on Foot.

San Antonio, Tex., Jan. 17.—When the great caravan of Mexican refugees marched north from Presidio the army found after counting noses that it had 5,325 refugees on its hands. The caravan numbered 4,419 before the additional arrived. It was a greater company by far than the War Department had bargained for in opening the door to an asylum beneath the flag of this republic.

The generosity of a great country providing "three square" meals a day for Mexican refugees was soon noised about by the crossing and recrossing of the river in the vicinity. So under the cover of night a large part of the town crossed the Rio Grande and when reveille sounded Major McNamee, the officer handling the movement, discovered a great increase in the population.

All the newcomers were willing to take oath that they belonged to the Mexican Federal army. There was only one thing to do. The Major rounded them up and moved on before the remainder of Ojinaga crossed the river.

Shafter, Tex., Jan. 17.—The tattered remnants of the Mexican Federal army, with women and children, 4,419 in all, who fled from Ojinaga, began their march across the sandy plains and through the mountains to Marfa, on their way to El Paso, where they will be placed in the internment camp.

The prisoners are guarded by six troops of United States cavalry on their march to the railroad. Trains were taken at Marfa for El Paso.

At the head of the procession of prisoners rode the six Federal Generals, Mercado, Castro, Orpinel, Landa, Romero and Aduna. They were followed by the tattered soldiers of their defeated army.

If the crowd had ever been an army it had no semblance of military bearing. It is a bundle of docile men, women and children doing what they are told and waiting the outcome with stolid indifference.

Occasionally an officer in gorgeous uniform suggested the military character of the organization, but gorgeous uniforms were rare and military discipline, if it ever existed, was left on the hills of Ojinaga.

The army marched in the fashion of Mexican irregulars. Every horse able to bear the burden had two riders, usually a man and a woman. Strong little burros carried domestic belongings, packed in huge bundles on both sides, with children perched on the top.

The women rode or walked with a watchful eye on children and domestic utensils. The men who had tobacco deftly rolled cigarettes and smoked.

A tattered soldier, recovering from wounds, occasionally dropped beside the road, but the procession did not stop. The wounded man was bundled into one of the wagons and hurried along. Children call for "agua" and the water bottles have to be opened. Occasionally the strain of a half savage song broke from the lips of one of the more buoyant spirits in the column, and was taken up by another and another until it reached down the entire line of tattered men and women.

It was a typical march of a typical Mexican army.

GUANO WORKS DESTROYED

Royster Plant, in Fairfield, Md., Suffers Heavy Loss by Flames.

Baltimore, Feb. 17.—The fertilizer plant of the F. S. Royster Guano Company at Fairfield, Md., just south of this city, caught fire, and before the flames were got under control, after several hours of hard fighting, damage estimated at between $50,000 and $100,000 had been done.

Many men narrowly escaped being caught under a falling concrete wall. Several were hurt, but not seriously, by flying pieces of concrete.

Three barges tied at the company's pier caught fire. They were towed out into the river where the blaze was extinguished, but not until the barges had been badly damaged.

16 DIE IN SUBMARINE BOAT

British A7 Makes Fatal Dive During Manoeuvres in White Sand Bay.

Plymouth, Jan. 17.—The British submarine A7, with 16 men on board, failed to come to the surface after a dive to the bottom of White Sand Bay during the manoeuvres and all on board are dead. There were circumstantial reports during the day of tapping by the imprisoned men which would show that they were alive, but these proved to be untrue.

Salvage vessels searched for the A7 throughout the day and until a late hour at night, but failed to locate it, and the searchers were recalled to Plymouth.
