SUPERIOR MILK CAN COVER

New York Man Invents Device Which Forms Tight Closure and Can Be Securely Locked.

In describing a milk can cover invented by R. O. Thompson of Campbell Hall, N. Y., the Scientific American says:

"The object here is to provide a cover which will form a perfectly tight closure for a vessel and be capable of being securely locked in closing position, so as to prevent access to the can by unauthorized persons. For this purpose the inventor constructs the neck of the can and the closure, which is fitted to the same so as to have snugly engaging surfaces, eliminating all possibility of leakage; and he provides an attachment for the top of the can which co-operates with the edge of the closure to enable a locking device to secure a closure in position on the can until the same is removed.

FAST MILKING BY MACHINES

Problem Is Long Way From Being Satisfactorily Solved—High Class of Help Is Necessary.

The problem of milking by means of machines is still a long way from being solved, but we are much nearer the goal than five years ago, or even a year ago, says the Farm and Fireside.

The New York experiment station has announced the result of a milking machine experiment which covered a period of four years. The experiments show that, including the time required to get the machines ready and to wash them after milking, cows can be milked by machine in 3.86 minutes to the cow, as compared with seven minutes for hand milking. A higher class of help is, however, necessary to milk by machinery.

For dairies of less than fifteen cows the use of machines was considered unprofitable and not to be recommended.

The hundreds of applications filed in the United States patent office show the interest in machine milking. Present day developments indicate that the best results are obtained by the intermittent suction principle, but we look for the time when milking machines will be cheaper and simpler. The cream separator of today is about one-fourth as large as one of equal capacity twenty years ago. A similar simplification may be true with milking machines.

SELECTING BREED FOR DAIRY

One Best Adapted for Prevailing Conditions Should be Preferred—Things to Consider.

In selecting a dairy breed it is not a matter of which is the best breed, but the one best suited for prevailing conditions. Select with a view to adaptability and for the purpose for which the animal is kept. Some breeds are noted for the quantity of milk they produce; others for the richness of their milk; others for the color of cream or butter. All these things must be taken into consideration before selecting a breed. Of the dairy breeds the Holstein has a number of high producing animals. They point with pride to such animals as Colantha IV Johanna with a record of over 1,100 pounds of butter in the year, and the alte queen of the dairy world, Banasthe Belle De Kol, with a record of over 1,300 pounds of butter in 365 days. The Jersey has Jacoba Irene, the Guernsey, Dolly Dimple, and the Ayrshire, Netherhall Brownie, all of which were a credit to their respective breeds.

High Grade Losers.

High-grade milch cows are high-grade losers. Earners are cheap at any price, and not even as a gift. The dairyman with the so-called "average cows" ought to be grateful to the pirates who would steal them.

Dehorned Cow Is Safe.

The cow that is dehorned is always more conveniently handled and safer to have about the place, but it is not always advisable to dehorn pure-bred cattle that are intended for sale or show purposes.

Seven Indictments Against Vance C. McCormick.

[Editorial by Harry M. Chalfant in "American Issue," official organ of Pennsylvania Anti-Saloon League.]

It is a settled fact that our Democratic brethren are getting in shape for a battle royal between this and May 19th, to determine who shall be their candidate for governor. Several months ago announcements were made that Michael J. Ryan, of Philadelphia, would be a candidate, and a vigorous campaign has been launched on his behalf. Numerous other Democrats had been suggested to compete with Mr. Ryan for the honor, when very suddenly and unexpectedly the announcement came that his opponent would be Vance C. McCormick, of Harrisburg. Now, within a few days after that announcement, there is a great flurry among that portion of the Democrats who advocate booze. The cause of the turmoil seems to be the advent of this man McCormick into the race.

The brewers and their allies make seven allegations against the aforesaid McCormick, and in addition to that, they utter a few other words that Uncle Sam does not permit us to publish in a paper which goes through the mails. The seven indictments against McCormick may be stated briefly as follows:

1. As executor of an estate, he controls the "Commonwealth," a dry hotel at Harrisburg, and that city's most popular hostelry. The charge against McCormick is that he refuses to lease the hotel without a clause in the article of agreement preventing the lessor from applying for license or dispensing booze in any way on the hotel property.

2. McCormick served one term as Mayor of Harrisburg. He promised the people, if elected, that he would put the lid on and hold it tight. He kept his promise. The liquor and gambling devotees were dead sore on him, but he was relentless and sat on the lid to the closing hour of his administration.

3. McCormick is proprietor of the "Patriot," the most widely read Democratic daily in the state outside of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. For many years the "Patriot" has through its editorial columns persistently advocated local option and other laws by which the people would be given greater power in the control and overthrow of the liquor business.

4. The "Patriot" refuses to accept or publish liquor advertisements.

5. In the campaign of 1910, McCormick refused to support the Democratic nominee, Webster Grimm, because he had been nominated at the behest of Penrose, Mulvihill, Guffey, Hall, McNichol, Brennan and other notorious bi-partisan liquor gangsters. McCormick threw his personal influence and that of his paper to Berry, the local option candidate.

6. McCormick then led off in a fight to reorganize the Democratic party and eliminate the old bi-partisan liquor bunch. This fight was successful, and left Guffey, Brennan, Hall Mulvihill and all their ilk out in the cold.

7. The liquorites find it impossible to "deal" with McCormick. They don't mind a scrap occasionally with a fellow who will afterwards "deal" and make some concessions, but whether right or not, they seem to have the conviction that Vance McCormick would be a real governor.

Taking all these facts into consideration, having found that the indictments herein charged are true, and fearing the election of McCormick if he is nominated, the liquor interests have decided to stake their future on the hope of winning a battle under the leadership of Michael J. Ryan.

His Table Manners.

"The charity worker," says one of them, "is always learning. We can learn much from the destitute. Thus, apropos of the affectation of some of our table etiquette, I once heard a ragged little chap at a school treat say, as he held a chicken leg in one fist and a hot potato in the other:

"The trouble about table manners is that they were invented by people who was never very hungry."

Pretty Collars.

Pretty collars, to be worn on blouses as well as outside the coats, are seen now in the shops and few are so intricate that they cannot be fashioned by the girl with a taste for needlework who wants to look well but can't afford high prices.

The upstanding frills tacked inside low collars are very dainty and a charming finish to the bare neck under a coat. The frillings are quite cheap now, and you can buy them as wide or as narrow as you wish.

An attractive round collar to be worn with a Dutch necked blouse can be made of a quarter of a yard of fine batiste. One seen recently was in the shape of a crescent moon, and the pointed ends and one side that were laid down on the back of the blouse were embroidered with a scallop drawn with a 10-cent piece—just a plain scallop, nothing more, but so carefully and beautifully embroidered that the stitches fairly melted together.
