C. J. Engle, for many years a prominent citizen of St. Paul passed out. Under capitalism it is almost a crime for a working man to live after he has become too old to work. A just social system will make old age the most pleasant period of his existence.

To-day men produce a profit for the use of their employer or he would refuse them a chance to work. This profit is what men seek when they invest their money in productive property which they do not use themselves.

narration by him of by-gone events put the laugh on to the faces of all which lasted a long time. He had a message of cheer, of trying to be happy and his presence was a blessing to his auditors.

Prof. Menges was next introduced. His subject was "How to Make Farming Pay". To establish this proposition he scored the present system of the rotation of crops. He divided all crops into two classes—those that enrich and those which exhaust the soil. The present rotation crops are all exhaustive; those that build up are the clovers, the beans, and winter vetch. A farmer who can't make his farm better should give it up. The schools should teach practical agriculture by having fields to cultivate near the school buildings. The kind of home, the way the crops are grown, and the manner of raising stock, all have a factor in making the farm to pay. A dairy farm should be treated in a different way than is used in general farming. His address abounded in ideas that scintillated with their freshness and originality.

There were on exhibition some of the old time quilts and coverlets, one of which is 110 years old.

Our Yearning for the Hills.

How much of the influence of early environment, of those habituated reactions which comprise for each one of us the iron ring of his destiny, there is in even our deeper attitude toward the external world—toward what we call Nature! Not long ago I spent many weeks in the prairie country of the west, a sense of oppression constantly increasing in weight upon my spirit. Those endless, level plains! Those roads that stretched without a break to infinity! A house, a group of barns, a fruit-orchard, now and then a clump of hardwoods, alone broke the endless, flat monotony of snow-covered fields—no, not fields, but infinitudes where a single furrow could put a girdle about an entire township in my home land! My soul hungered for a hill; my heart craved, with a dull longing, the sight of a naked birch-tree flung aloft against the winter sky. Back through the endless plains of Illinois the train crawled, away from the setting sun. But the next daylight disclosed the gentle rolling slopes of the Mohawk valley, and before many hours had passed the Berkshire hills were all about, like familiar things recovered. The camel-hump of Greylock to the north was sapphire-blue and beckoning. The nearer mountains wore their reddish mantles, pricked with green, above the snowy intervals, and laid their bare outlines stark against the sky. Shadowy ravines let into their flanks, suggestive of roaring brooks and the mystery of the wilderness. The clouds trailed purple shadow-anchors; the sun flashed from the ice on their sacred ledges. And a weight seemed suddenly lifted from my spirit. The words of the ancient Psalmist came to my lips unconsciously: "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills. From whence cometh my help? My help cometh from God."—Walter Prichard Eaton in Harper's Magazine.

Is Vocational Training Enough?
If man could live by bread alone we might rest with vocational education. But by that very intellectual unrest that makes for evolution he cannot. Having eaten, he must learn to use the life he has preserved. But while sustenance is theoretically a very simple problem being only a question of how much you can earn and what you can buy with it, the use one makes of the vital energy into which life transforms is the most complex and difficult of all questions. Religion, ethics, education all bear upon it, intersect and blend so that it is almost as difficult to say what teaches one to live as to answer the question of how to live itself. It is enough to observe that education has a part here which is not vocational, and which is enormously important.

This is the province of liberal education. Its services are indirect, because its effects must be transmitted into the art of living; they are uncertain in the same proportion as all life is illusory and never to be confined in measures made by man. Nevertheless, although these services are definite in their breadth, at least we can specify some of them. We know, for example, that the mind must be able to grasp abstractions; and so we apply mathematics. We know that it must have perspective and background if it is to understand the passing show of brief reality allowed it; and so we instill history. We know that it must be able to interpret character, to feel the loftiest emotion, to perceive beauty and enjoy it; and so we give it literature and the arts. Man is to be liberalized. He is to be taught to comprehend life.—Henry S. Canby in Harper's Magazine.

THE THREE POLICIES.

Once upon a time there was a beautiful princess who was passionately admired and loved by everyone who saw her picture in the leading fashion papers week after week, as she sat on a fence looking at a football game, or was walking with her chow dog in a high wind.

One day the princess ordered a proclamation to the following effect sent out:

"Here are three insurance policies. The young man in all my kingdom who can interpret any one of them correctly can have my hand in matrimony."

The news rapidly spread, and the next morning three young men presented themselves for the test.

Said the first:

"This means that in case your palace burns down you get 80 per cent of the difference between what it is appraised at, less what the company thinks you ought to have, minus what the last legislative body thought ought to be conceded on account of a bad fire that took place in Constantinople year before last."

Everybody cheered at this, and the first suitor began to make calculations on the back of an envelope as to the cost of a wedding breakfast.

Then said the second suitor:

"Hem! This is an accident insurance, covering loss of limb or death or other injury—provided that the deceased was in good health at the time, and did not suspect anything. Also, if the moon was in the third quarter, or he was lying under a motor car with the west wind, then everything is null and void, in which case the weekly indemnity, if any, is subject to a fine and possible imprisonment, all common carriers excepted."

The second suitor was also highly applauded, and it really looked as if he might get all the gate money, when the third suitor stepped forward. He was, as is customary, much handsomer than the other two, and very poor and honest, and really needed looking after; but when the princess handed him the third insurance policy he shook his head and refused it.

"Your majesty," he said, "you will have to pardon me, but I didn't know what the test was. I am young and innocent, but I know too much, I hope, to attempt to interpret any insurance policy in these days. Sorry to lose you, but I beg to withdraw."

Then the princess threw herself in his arms, while the grand vizier ordered a couple of underwriters buried alive.

"I knew by the blank look on your face, darling, that you were a sure winner," cried the princess.—From Life.

Burials Differ.

The modes of burial differ widely among various peoples, from the rudest ceremonies and methods of the wandering tribes to the ornate, impressive, reverent services of "the heir of all ages, in the foremost files of time."

Among some the dead are buried lying, others sitting, as is the case with several of the Indian tribes; and instances are related where warriors or leaders in the nations have been buried seated upon their favorite war horse, as was done with the famous Blackbird, the chief of the once powerful Omahas.

But there is a remarkable agreement of custom for the practice of placing the body east and west. Sometimes the body is placed with the head to the east and sometimes to the west. It is held by certain writers that this custom is due to solar symbolism, and the head is placed to the east or to the west according as the dead are thought of in connection with the sunrise, the reputed home of the deity, or the sunset, the reputed home of the dead.

There are, however, some tribes that lay their dead north and south, and others bury men with the face to the north and women with the face to the south; while among some of the African tribes, if one happens to die away from his home, he is buried facing his native village.

Disregard of Truth.

If Orientals have one fault more than another it is a disregard for truth. In the early days of the English occupation of India, the English judges were astounded at the conflicting stories told by witnesses, and they soon learned to set them all down as unworthy of credence. In American courts it is also well known that Chinese are very penurious of the truth, and that no oath will prevent them from giving witness. In Egypt it is also very easy to get native witnesses to swear to anything, true or untrue. For instance: Ahmed, a native of Cairo, had a slave who peeped over a wall into Suleiman's harem, and the ladies considered themselves insulted. Suleiman wanted revenge but he could not bring his wives into court to testify, so it was agreed that Suleiman should accuse Ahmed's camel of walking on Suleiman's land. A crowd of witnesses came forward and for two days testified about the camel and the land, until the English judge decided in favor of Suleiman. It was not until a week afterward that he discovered to his great surprise that Suleiman had no ground and Ahmed no camel.

Warm Food.

Warm bread or cake and in fact warm food of any kind should never be put away in a covered tin or dish. The steam makes molding certain. Vegetables become soggy and unfit for food when treated in this manner.
