BEER KEGS IN HARVEST FIELDS

Following the advice of farmers in Kansas, farmers in the vicinity of Greenville, Pa., have found a new use for beer kegs. They are used as a new attachment to grain harvesters preventing miring in wet fields and J. S. Patton, a farmer there, is authority for the statement that the keg is a great success. The keg is attached under the knoter and in a line with the master wheel of the machine.

Mr. Patton affirms that with his beer keg attachment he has been able to operate his harvester in fields in which he could not have used the machine otherwise. His device is attracting considerable attention, as farmers all over the country are in a quandary as to how they will harvest their wheat, many having to revert to the old method of cradling.
