It has often been said that business It has often been said that business in foreign lands has owed much to Christian missions in opening up new territory to trade. It now develops that missions will owe something to big business. It has been the custom for the home offices of the foreign missionary societies to pay their representatives in the field by foreign drafts. The war has made this method impossible. The treasurers of the various missionary boards at a method impossible. The treasurers or the various missionary boards at a joint meeting voted to appeal to some American mercantile house doing business in every part of the world. They decided to ask the Standard Oil company to become the agent of the mission boards for the transmission of money to their stations in foreign fields, and through its treasurer the arrangement was speedily made. The readiness of the company in doing this without compensation is indicative of the spirit of co-operation for the common good which underlies our great corporations.—Leslie's Weekly

KEEPING PET ANIMALS.

Doctor Says Too Much Care Cannot Be Taken,

Dr. Ziegler, director of the Philadel-phia department of health and chari-ties, has issued a warning to the ef-fect that too much care cannot be exercised in keeping pet animals.

He cautions particularly against a cat that snifles because the animal may carry germs of whooping cough and diphtheria. Cats, horses, dogs, wolves and even skunks, he points out, can cause hydrophobia through a -Pathfinder.

About three fourths of the nuts produced in the United States are grown in California, almonds taking the lead Almonds are a native of western Asia and Morocco, and are produced in large quantities in Syria and Palestine. They are exported largely from Malaga in Spain,

The walnut is a native of the mountains of Greece and Armenia, and the northwest Himalayas in India, and is largely cultivated in most temperate countries. Walnuts in the United States are produced almost exclusively California.

In nuts, California products practically the whole of the almond crop in the United States.

The water chestnut, or horn chestnut (Trapa bispinosa), an aquatic plant, produces a seed or "nut" which somewhat resembles two curved horns united in one, the kernel of which is largely used as a food by the inhabi-tants of Asiatic countries. This so-called nut is also on sale in the United States, but chiefly in Chinese shops, Another water plant (Eleocharis tu-berosa) is also known as the water chestnut, but in this case it is the corn chestnut, but in this case it is the corn or bulb that is eaten. It is not unlike a chestnut in shape, and has a tough brown skin. This is grown in Asia, but is imported by Chinese in America. A pointed nut or seed somewhat like a pecan in appearance, the pit of the Chinese olive (Canarium sp.), is also on sale at Chinese shops in the United States. The kernels are oily but palatable, resembling the common American butternut (Juglans cinerea) American butternut (Juglans cinerea) in flavor. Closely related species of Canarium nuts are also imported to some extent for general trade, though they are by no means common.

From time to time new nuts make their appearance on the market. A nut which seems to be growing in popuarity, though still uncommon, is the Paradise nut of South America, which resembles a Brazil nut in appearance and flavor. Still less common is the South American cream nut though it is sometimes shipped to the United States. The choicest member of the Brazil nut group is the true "butter-nut" of the tropics, which is very sel-dom found outside that region. Its flavor is very delicate and delicious but it does not keep well; and even if it would bear shipment successfully the available supply is at present very

The cashew nut of tropical regions which many consider one of the most delicious nuts grown, has long been known, but has never become com-mon. It is sold to some extent and brings high prices. Cashew nut can-dy is also sold in a limited way in the United States. This nut must be roasted before it is eaten.

The Kingsland chestnut was almost unknown a few years ago, but is now being cultivated in California. It some-what resembles a filbert in appearance and is not a true chestnut. The tabebuja (Talfairia pedata), from Zanzibar is a nut eaten roasted, which has been grown in a very limited way at the Porto Rico agricultural experiment station, and is almost unknown, ex-cept in the region where it is native. The so-called nuts are the seeds of a pumpkin-like fruit, and the oval, rather flat, and much larger than pumpkin seeds. The flavor is oily and fairly palatable.

The use of such seed as a nut is in line with the common use in Russia of the sunflower seed, which is rich in oil and not unlike some of the com-mon nuts in composition. The raw sunflower seeds are eaten out of hand at all times and by all China watermelon seeds are eaten in the same way.—Reno Gazette.

Cleverness of Ponies

Will some naturalist explain why ponies, as a rule, are more intelligent There is no doubt that big norses? There is no dubt they are, and the fact receives new proof in a story that comes from Maine. A farmer who owns a horse and a pony was told that if he put good-sized stones in their feed boxes they would be obliged to eat slower, and would therefore divest their food and would therefore digest their food better. He tried the plan, and it work-ed well with the horse, but the pony picked the stones out one by one, and dropped them on the floor, and he did this just as often as they were put in the feed-box.

Bees Have No Common Sense.

Henri Fabre, the "Insects' Homer, as Maeterlinck calls him, asserts that bees have no reason, only instinct, and gives many proofs of his asser tion. For example, he opened the bot tion. For example, he opened the bottom of a cell in course of construction, but the bee that was building it kept right on with its work, building up the cell and storing honey in it, quite unconscious of the fact that the food for the future generation was oozing out, and finally laid its egg and sealed up the ton of the cell perer paying any the top of the cell, never paying any attention to the hole in the bottom.
