MINE RESCUE

CERTIFICATES GIVEN.

Nineteen students in the School of Mines at the Pennsylvania State College have been awarded government certificates for proficiency in mine rescue work and first aid to injured miners. Special instruction in those branches was given the students by the crew of experts on the U. S. Bureau of Mines Rescue Car No. 1 which spent two weeks training Penn State students in the use of apparatus that permitted them to enter mine tunnels filled with poisonous gasses.

The senior miners had previously received technical instruction with helmets, pulmotors, and oxygen tanks in their regular school of mine course. Credit for the preliminary training was allowed by the government. Each student who spent ten hours in underground work in regulation rescue equipment, and fifteen hours in first-aid were granted certificates. Fourteen qualified in both rescue and first aid work, and five in first-aid only: All of the instruction was given in the school of mines tunnel which was flooded with the fumes of sulphur dioxide.
