TWO ROAMING BOYS.

I will write a truthful story For the boys that are at home, If they have got a mother They should never try to roam. Such young boys should never think That their mother doesn't know. They should always ask their Ma When they have a place to go.
 The town, Great Falls, Montana, Was a young man's starting place. He did not like his mother So he took an awful pace. He was roaming through the states, When he found he was alone, His money was all squandered, He was far away from home.
 He found Youngstown, Ohio, And another roaming friend. They both got on a freight That was bound for eastern land. They arrived at Meyersdale Just a step below the cut. They were just a little black From the engine's dirty smut. They started down the track Toward that little Garrett town. They spied a piece of copper And they grabbed it like a hound. They met a junk man coming And he bought their copper quick. He was telling them a scheme How to make some money slick.
 Two junk bags were freely paid With the money in advance. They were tickled very much When they knew they had a chance. In the darkness of the night He then showed the boys the place. Then he left the boys alone And they had a rubber chase.
 In the town of Meyersdale, On the shady street, Broadway, Traveled two young railroad bums Without any great delay. In the first house to the left, There they got their stolen junk; They were loaded down so much That they walked just like a monk. They delivered those two sacks To that little hiding place They were awful tired now With a very sleepy face. Then they found a lodging place In a B. and O. box car, Dreaming of their lovely home They have left to roam afar.
 Filling sacks the second time Just as quiet as a mouse, They were getting ready now To escape from that old house. They started out the window With a sack upon their back. One had just arrived outside When he heard a little crack.
 The police was waiting there To assist him with his load Who asked him where he's going And he said "Just down the road." With the rubber on their backs They were marched right up to jail. When he asked them to explain They just turned a little pale.
 They told their shameful story To the justice of the peace. They had two sacks of rubber And their troubles did increase. Their case was well considered When they took them for a ride. In the jail at Somerset Those poor robbers did abide.
 There they had some time to think As they walked the prison floor, Now they know what they have done The deceased was 55 years old. The When they see the iron door. They were brought before the judge As two robbers from the west. The judge gave them their sentence And I know they were not best.
 Those boys are now in sorrow And directed by the law, They are longing very much For their tender-hearted Ma. This is a little lesson For the other boys that sail. If they try to rob a man, They are always sure to fail.

The Tuxedo Hour
 by Walt Mason

Tuxedo's bully all the time; it makes the passing hours sublime, and by its soft and gracious curves it soothes the soul and rests the nerves, and fills my bosom, once again, with peace on earth, good will to men. But best I like it when I've fed this face of mine with jam and bread. When I have dined on Irish stew and beans and boiled potatoes, too, and pie and eggs and cheese and tripe, 'tis then I best enjoy my pipe. When from the table I withdraw, I grip my briar with my jaw, and fill it with Tuxedo mild—the pure Tuxedo undefiled—and smoke away in perfect bliss; no pleasure can compare with this. And in the curling smoke I see a world that seemeth good to me. A world that's debonair and gay, its woes and worries done away. The plans that seemed foredoomed to fail, the work that seemed of no avail, now wear the rosy glow of hope, and I endorse all sunshine dope. 'Tis thus in my Tuxedo hour; the world that seemed so dark and dour, is blooming like a rose of spring, and I'm in mood to laugh and sing.

ASHES ARE VALUABLE

Wood and House Ashes Contain Potash.
 The farmer who burns wood for heating and cooking should carefully store the ashes and not permit them to leach, as they have a peculiar fertilizing value. They not only contain potash and phosphoric acid in appreciable amounts, but also contain magnesia and lime, and when applied to the land they also act indirectly to increase the available nitrogen content of organic matter in the soil.
 Ordinary house ashes contain on the average about 8 or 9 per cent. of potash and 2 per cent phosphoric acid. Investigators have considered that there is enough potash and phosphoric acid in a bushel of ashes to make it worth 20 or 25 cents. Besides that, some 10 or 15 cents additional might be allowed for the "alkali power" of the ashes. This power is that which enables ashes to rot weeds and to ferment peat. The potash content of ashes will be lost if they are permitted to leach and care should be taken to store them in a dry place.
 The ashes of coal do not contain enough potash to make valuable in this connection.
