JESS WILLARD CONTINUES WORLD CHAMPION BOXER

In a ten-round bout with Frank Moran at Madison Square Garden, New York on Saturday night, Jess Willard continues to hold the championship in the world's arena of pugilism. By the laws of the State, prize fighting carried to the point of a finish for either of the contestants is prohibited, unless it occur within the ten rounds.

Of the two contestants, Willard had 58 pounds to his credit, weighing 259 and besides was five inches taller than was Moran. That the latter could go it to the end was a marvel to many.

The men did not shake hands either before or at the close of the contest; we think that was more genuine, for each was bent with great feeling upon the defeat of the other almost if necessary to the point of death.

The prize fight is not so engrossing on the general public as in other years. It is by no means ennobling, yet nations have war, and men in ordinary life try to do the other or to get ahead of his competitors. From top to bottom, from the poor to the wealthy, from the weak to the strong, there is an everlasting contest, always has been, but it is to be hoped that the time may come when man shall even care as much for his fellow man as he does for himself, when the ideal community life shall prevail.

Everything is going up except the price of newspapers. Almost all articles of food are soaring; sugar here is now 8 2-3 cents per pound, owing to strikes in sugar refineries and the sugar now coming in is mostly beet sugar from the west. It costs one-third more to live now than even a year ago. Gasoline is climbing to forty cents a gallon and may even go beyond that. In the printing line all prices are soaring and envelopes and other stationery have risen 20 to 30 per cent in price. The editor who is the fortunate possessor of a linotype finds he must pay about 40 per cent more for his metal. And all this increased cost and added burdens are ascribed to the war, instead of to the greed of those who can thus make the lot of their fellow man harder.

The song of the robin in a sweet sound now after the long months of snow and ice. The little red-breasted songster may have many chilly hours yet, however. Though the robin flies to the south in the winter months he seldom pours for his musical notes in the far south, but saves them for his home folks. The mocking bird must be the principal sweet musician of the air in the South land.

Last Friday evening the Seniors held an elaborate theatre party and Dansant, followed by a banquet at the Rex Club Arcade. The theatre party began at 7:00 p. m., when all went into the "Gaiety" to enjoy the dramatic amusement. After enjoying this high class entertainment, they strolled leisurely up Center to the club. Here they were greeted by strains of high class music issuing from a graphonola. After enjoying several one steps, and Paul Jones they partook of a glorious repast. Following this enjoyed more music and several dances. The menu for the evening consisted of "hot dog" pickles, olives, potato chips, "pop", and candy mingled with the delicate strains of dreamy music.

The Senior Class wishes to thank the Rex Club for the use of the hall and F. B. Thomas for the use of the Graphonola.

Gregg Darrow, while in History Class the other day heard the primary pupils marching up the street stamping their feet very heavily and she received a grand inspiration and wrote the following lines:

I hear the patter of little feet,
Upon the bricks outside,
I wonder if the way they stamp,
Don't sting their tender hides.

Mary Will and Frank Hocking had to remain after school last Thursday. The reason was that Mary tried her muscular powers on Frank. Her weapon was not a rolling pin or bread knife, but a rubber overshoe. It is a surprise to their friends that they should indulge in a quarrel so early, and they all hope that the engagement has not been broken. The cause for the trouble is unknown but it is thought that Frank had his arm out of place again.

Earl Opel professes to be very much satisfied with his new seat and claims he did not realize how much the old corner lacked until he was moved up "next to Heaven," as he expressed it. Elizabeth Bolden sits next to Earl, and it has been noticed that he looks exceedingly well satisfied. Blondes are always attractive and in the said party herein mentioned, Earl has shown exceedingly good taste.

John Hocking who has dreams of making millions in stocks, is at present all stuck up over fly paper stocks. He says it is bound to rise.

Has anybody noticed the wise look about Joe Shultz? He says he is getting wisdom in the form of grinders at the back part of his jaws.

Unlike the Sophomore's the Freshmen programme will be made out entirely by Freshmen, and already shows thoroughly the languid enthusiasm stirred up on the Sophomore Class Day, for everybody has said, "Wonder what the Freshies are going to have? We wish to assure you that most of the programme will be entirely new, because you see, the Freshmen minds are fresh and have not been dulled by two or three years in High School. Thus why should not our bright eager minds, think of hundreds of things that the rather (we are sorry to say) swell headed Sophs should never think of.
