

SALISBURY

Renovations and Buildings
Noah Spelcher is having his residence on Grant St. remodeled. A number of rooms will be added, a new bath installed, and a gabled roof put on; all of which will add greatly to his already attractive home. A well is also being drilled, but this is unfortunately delayed by the drill breaking off when about fifty feet under ground. Mr. Gideon Miller is at work to remove the tool from the ground, or if this is impracticable, a new well will be begun.

Some of our St. Paulers cannot see why private interests to enhance their profits secure their holdings, and protect their trade in goods which the producer would need but cannot buy, should expect him the producer to fight to maintain such interests. They think it is extreme folly to starve amidst plenty when they have produced plenty. They see no sense for any useful worker or producer to adhere for a moment to any political organization that does not try to make it possible to give all an equal chance to be producers and secure them in the values created. They really think there is nothing in this life too good for them to enjoy. They do not object to all the heaven that is possible of attainment here.

The Fall Dress Up is Here
Come in With a Rush
This Morning.

Here is what it means to you Men of Meyersdale—you're all on the Reception Committee, every one of you. It's a special time that is set aside when all of you buy Men's clothes; have everything fresh, smart, snappy looking. It makes you feel the way you look—more efficient ready to "mix things" with business; it helps to restore the energy that has been snapped by a long, hot summer. It's a great thing even if it only lasts officially two weeks; it shows Men how much clothes have to do with success the effects of such a campaign lasts months.

THIS WE KNOW

Hart Schaffner & Marx fine clothes Suits or Overcoat you can easily have that "Dressed-up" feeling all Fall and Winter they are made for that. They keep stylish looking.

CENTENARIANS

Old Wax has lived a hundred years in this unwholesome vale of tears, this wilderness of woe. I asked him how he turned the trick. "Please tell me all about it, quick, for Judge would like to know."

"I follow certain simple rules," said old Bill Wax, "and only fools will spurn these rules of mine; I rise each morn at 3 o'clock, and in the country take a walk, nine miles, in storm or shine. I've never smoked, I've never chewed; such practices are vain and lewd, and shorten human life; I've lived a bachelor, for I am sure that health and comfort fly when one secures a wife. I've never swallowed beer or gin, for when you pour such liquors in your health you undermine observing simple rules like these I'm sound and healthy as you please, be nash and my fig and vine."

I mused, "It is an easy thing to live a hundred years, by jing, I'll follow his advice; I'll cut out cigarettes and beers, and in another hundred years, I'll still be cutting ice."

Old Hunks has lived a hundred years disgusting men who deal in beers, and shrouds and monuments; he still hangs on and draws his breath, and eats his grub while Father Death is swatting other gents.

I sought him at his humble abode, and said, "It's strange how high you stack, considering your age; I'd like to have you tell the truth about your system, ancient youth, for Judge's shining page."

The old man said, "Doggone my eyes, I shun all kinds of exercise, I sleep most all the day, and when the hours of evening come I drink a demijohn of rum before I hit the hay. I do what most fellows do: I smoke tobacco and I chew, I live on cigarettes; I've had four wives, and still alive, I'm looking out for number five; I never pay my debts."—By Walt Mason from Judge.

The Reward of Virtue
Once upon a time there was a man who was known as the laziest in the world. He spent most of his time trying to figure out how he could avoid anything that had even a family resemblance to labor. He slept late mornings, and loafed all day. He was proud of his record and boasted that his life. The neighbors shook their heads over him, and predicted all sorts of awful things for him in the future.

The wheels of administration revolved, and the laziest man in the world found himself an unexpectedly appointed postmaster of the village. He took up his new duties with a sigh, fearing a blot on his hitherto unblemished panache of idleness. But his talent for avoiding work saved him, and it was not long until that post office was full of devices which enabled the laziest man in the world to spend his time around the stove with the rest of the boys, while the government's business took care of itself.

Not long after the inauguration of this era of millennial inactivity, an inspector came snooping around those parts. He entered the post office of the laziest man in the world prepared to make trouble. He took one look at the arrangements, and fled to the telegraph office; and the Postmaster General, was in receipt of several dozen winged words that night.

The laziest man in the world is now employed at a fabulous remuneration as an Efficiency Expert.—From Judge.

Reflections of a Bachelor
Republicans aren't any more ungrateful than intimate friends.

A man tries to appreciate his family by appreciating himself.
A girl wants to get married early because she ought to know better.
Understanding a woman would be easy enough for a man if she even wanted him to.

After the kind of paper it is written on, the next most important thing to a girl about a love letter is the underscoring.

A young man is ashamed to tip a waiter too little, an old man too much.
Some men seem to be able to win success simply by claiming they have.

It's much more important to tell a girl she is pretty than to think she is.
A woman has such an imagination she can make herself think she is almost younger than her daughter.

What a man likes about going to church is when his wife is away on a visit, and he can write her he went, but didn't.
