CHARLES RAY, in

Triangle Program.

There is one bad Englishman and there is one good Englishman and they're both titled. One of 'em loves little "Pat" and the other one loves money. There's a million in jewels too, but the big thing is the sweet, virile story that pulls and grips and holds you. Charles Ray and Margaret Thompson have never done better nor had a better vehicle than the New Triangle-Kay Bee play, "The Honorable Algy" at the Summer Garden Tuesday, also a two-part Keystone comedy. Music by the orchestra. No advance in price. If you are not a regular on Triangle night you are missing the best motion pictures.

A LINGERING CRUCIFIXION

"I know that county of Schuylkill, Penn. I lived there as a boy. A youngster there has two chances to work-down in the ground where it is almost criminal to send a child, or in the breakers where I worked as a boy. It is not living to work in those breakers: it is a slow lingering crucifixion. Talk of the mothers! Good God! Hasn't the State of Pennsylvania heart enough to provide for these mothers without depriving the children of their chance in the world?"

This is REPRESENTATIVE LEWIS of Maryland, Chairman of the Labor Committee, in a speech in the house of Representatives. Watch for date for this big Fox attraction, William Farnum in a story of Love and Renunciation that is woven into a theme of Burning Public Interest. A stirring plea for the little slaves of the factory.

Gossip.

Of all the evils that one can possess 'Tis gossip that murders the most; It feasts on its victim and drinks of blood

Then gloats o'er the sorrow it caused. The innocent sufferer and foul is the crime,

For truth hath small part in the vice, And thoughtlessly, heartlessly slander goes on

While well meaning people indulge. But oh, for the anguish and ruin of life

The poor helpless victims must bear, And what is the gain to the vender of tales

But miserly meanness of soul. 'Tis gossip attacks in a cowardly way The one without chance for defense, And when he is absent, is helpless or down

The vender of gossip prevails. Ah Gossip is one of the dangerous tools

That Satan holds out to each one, For nothing can wreak such havoc as this

And nothing can torture so much. So strange is the fact that so many believe

The evil reports that they hear And never they question for proof of the charge

But thoughtlessly tell it again. The calumny lives with its blight and its ruin

Yet justice shall surely prevail, For they who are guilty of falsehood and hate

Will surely be judged for it all.

BLACK FRIDAYS.

First of These Financial Terrors Came in London in 1745.

Several of the great financial panics of the past have commenced on a Friday, and this has given rise to one of the pet superstitions of the stock exchanges and bourses of the world—that the sixth day of the week is fraught with ill omen for those engaged in financial operations.

The original "Black Friday" occurred Dec. 6, 1745, in London. On that date tidings reached the metropolis that the pretender, Bonnie Prince Charlie, had reached Derby with his forces. Londoners immediately made preparations to fly from the city, and a panic prevailed. It was on that occasion that the Bank of England had its closest call in its long history. The citizens were anxious to take their money with them, and the Bank of England was besieged by an army of depositors. The bank escaped bankruptcy only by the expedient of placing "dummies" in the line to impede genuine depositors and by paying bona fide depositors in small coins, thus consuming much time in making change.

The first "Black Friday" of latter day financial history was in 1866 and was due to the failure of one of London's largest banking houses. Three years later Wall street had a "Black Friday," due to an attempt to engineer a corner in gold. The worst of all "Black Fridays" was that of 1873, when on Friday, Sept. 18, it seemed that the whole financial structure of the new world had crumbled into ruins. —Exchange.

A FAMILY ORCHESTRA.

Has Your Home One, and, if It Has, Does This Just Fit It?

When two people conduct an orchestra there is more material. If the two are knit by marriage ties the plot thickens. Endicott and I conduct a family orchestra, he, at the piano, I playing second violin. I know more about music than does Endicott; he is more musical than I. I keep the time; he has the temperament. Temperament is more noble than time, but time, I shall always insist, has its place, perhaps nowhere more appropriately than in an orchestra. He at the piano can dominate the situation more neatly than I. In my position among the strings, however, I can more readily organize a strike.

The rest of the pieces are presided over by our children, young people of inflexible spirit and chromatic moods. Sometimes we doubt whether we have our troupe under the rigid control which as parents we might expect to command. The conductivity of an orchestra, says our son Geoffrey, varies with the distance of the blood relationship between artists and conductor. When the children were little we held the pleasant theory that a family orchestra would draw us all close together, standing always as a symbol of our perfect harmony. That would be all right if the harmony would only go to suit us all equally at the same time. As it is our little band, in which observers find so touching a picture of heartside unity, suggests sometimes all the elements of guerrilla warfare.—Atlantic Monthly.

A Statue That Never Was Built. Mount Athos, in Turkey, was the spot contemplated by a sculptor for the most imposing monument that man had ever had. The sculptor Diocrates offered to cut the huge mountain mass into the form of a statue of Alexander which should hold a city in the left hand and in the right a basin to receive all the waters that flowed from the mountain.

Alexander was much taken by the plan, but rejected it for the practical reason that there was not food enough in the district to feed the inhabitants of the proposed town. So the canal cut by Xerxes to enable the ships to escape sailing round the mountain remained the greatest enterprise ever achieved there.

The man with money should open Bank Accounts for his children.
