SPRINGS NEWS

A blizzard temporarily closed the roads in our community for a few days last week. Business is again moving normally, however, due partly to the effective use of our home made snow-plow developed by our local "engineers" of Springs. At this writing the snow is melting—mercury standing near forty-five degrees and signs for more precipitation are prominent.

The Farmer's Meeting at F. W. Bender's store was a successful event. A large group of interested farmers assembled to gain the help to be given by experts of power farming. What with the increased use of tractor, farming, and what with the increasing use of mechanical transportation for the farmer we are some times inclined to look back at the days of the "oxen" and "scythe" and "cradle" and "man power" and pity the poor farmer of "ye olden days" "befo' the war." But let us remember they were often happier and more content than we of the present day who travel seventy miles an hour and cut and thresh thirty acres of grain in a day. The "farmers movies" were enjoyed by young and old.

N. E. Miller, who had spent six weeks at Harrisonburg, Va., as special instructor at the Eastern Menomite School during the short, bible term has again returned to his home.

The Young People's Meeting for March 3, will be in charge of Norman Miller. The subject is "The Surrendered Life."

A small group from here had a singing at the home of Simon Orndorf near Grantsville, Md., on Sunday.

Norman Miller's were visiting at N. S. Maust's on Sunday.

Jonas Ash and wife were visiting at S. L. Maust's on Sunday.

AW-TOUCHED FELTS CARRY MESSAGE OF SPRING ON THE WAY

WELL, in the realm of smart hats, felt is still the central theme. Indeed, it is during these intermediate days 'twixt winter and spring that enthusiasm for colorful felts runs highest. Considering the ingenuity and skill with which milliners are working felt, it is no wonder that once again the felt hat is proving a magnet which is attracting all seekers of smart headwear unto it.

The ways and workings of the brims of felt hats are past analyzing. Suffice it to say that brims were never more intriguing or unusual or so universally flattering. The top hat in this picture with the embroidered flowers give a fair idea of how ingeniously brims are manipulated.

A touch of straw on a felt hat works wonders in creating a feeling of spring in the air. It is the straw-touched felt which is holding the center of the stage at this very moment. Note the model at the top to the right in this group. The picture fails to show it very clearly, but under the fringe of felt, if you will look closely, you will discover a crelet which is formed of hand sewn wee straw braid. 'Nuff said! Spring is on the way!

The plaited brim—it's the latest, and this one is more than usually becoming, because of its off-the-face character.

The manner in which the grosgrain ribbon band is drawn through slashes in the felt on the hat to the left adds to the attractiveness of this model. The downward trend of the brim at the back is characteristic of many of the new shapes.

There are many problems of addition being worked out by the milliner this season. That is, one material is added to another—felt plus straw, silk plus cellophane and other equally as interesting alliances. The center hat trims a fine crochet body hat with felt which forms its own natural fringe.

The last hat is a through-and-through felt model even to its plunage, which is made of the felt fringed at each side.

OFFICER CAMPBELL CRUSHED BY TRUCK

Caught as Fire Truck Was Rushing to Horning Fire—Has Returned to Duty.

Officer Campbell, who is a member of the Meyersdale Volunteer Fire Department and who was going to attend the fire at Wm. Horning's residence on Salisbury St., was standing on the left side of the fire truck and when the truck passed the entrance he was caught on the left side and crushed against the building. He is now able to be out and around, and during his absence from duty his work is being taken care of by Constable David R. Cramer.

In the Haunted House

By FREDERICK HART

"Pshaw! There's no such thing as a ghost!" Cordelia Davis' voice was defiant. "There's no more harm in that old house than there is in a chicken coop."

"But, Cordelia, old Bates says—" "Oh, don't tell me what old Bates says! I wouldn't believe that old reprobate on a stack of Bibles!"

The object of Cordelia's outburst of skepticism was a group of young people around the fireplace in the Davis country house.

The talk had drifted from golf and bridge to haunted houses and some one had mentioned that it was haunted, and adducing the evidence of old Bates, the perpetuate gardener of the Davis menage, as evidence in support.

A weird tale of moving lights and hollow groans had caused the company to sit a little closer around the fire—all except Cordelia. She shouted her derision at the idea, and overrode the objections of the company.

"Why," she finished, as a sort of crusher to trample all opposition, "I wouldn't be afraid to spend a night in that old place any time. I'll go there tonight!"

And before anyone could protest she was out of the room. Looking out of the window they could see her in the early moonlight walking rapidly toward the path that led to the haunted house, with a shawl which she had caught up in her progress through the hall, thrown over her head. The company returned to their seats by the fire a little sobered by the incident.

"I think Cordelia's very foolish to rush off like that," said Betty Sterne, one of the most popular of the guests. "She might meet a tramp or a dog or anything. Don't you think some one might go after her?"

"Whoever went after her would run an awful risk of being eaten alive," retorted Charles West, Betty's suitor of the moment. "Cordelia's made up her mind, and nothing we could do would change it."

So the crowd continued its chatter, apparently forgetful of the obstinate Cordelia. But one man was moody and silent. This was Jimmy Westlake. He did not like the idea of Cordelia's being out alone, even though the ruined house was on her own property and there was nothing to be apprehended from tramps or other prowlers of the night. His solicitude was not entirely based on disinterestedness; Cordelia had long ago entangled him in the meshes of her attractiveness, but he was by nature a silent man, who did not show well in the company of the more brilliant, if shallower, group that surrounded Cordelia.

So he had never spoken.

As the hour wore on toward half past eleven, Jimmy's uneasiness increased. Finally he could bear it no longer, and with a word of excuse about going out to the garage to see about something he had forgotten to do to his car, he slipped from the room. Once outside he headed for the haunted house.

The broken edifice was ghostly enough in the pale moonlight, with its crumbling walls, glassless windows and shattered door. He stole cautiously up the path to the doorway, and ever as his foot touched the worn sill he heard a muffled shriek from within.

Every nerve on fire, he rushed through the lithe hall and came to a door from behind which emanated sobs mingled with an unearthly clanking sound.

It was locked, but his shoulder sent it crashing inward and he found himself in a room dusty with the accumulation of years, in which the moonlight filtered dimly through dirty panes; in one corner a huddled heap of white which he knew to be Cordelia; and across the floor something black and shapeless was moving accompanied by that ghostly rattle!

He kicked savagely at the thing. It leaped away with a snarl, and the moonlight fell on it—a small dog with a collar from which dangled a few feet of rusty chain!

Relieved, Jimmy laughed aloud, and took two strides to where Cordelia crouched, her hands over her face. At the sound of his voice she looked up, then suddenly sprang to her feet and threw her arms around his neck, hiding her face on his shoulder.

"Oh, Jimmy, Jimmy! I'm so glad you came! I'm so glad!"

Even when he explained that it was only a dog she refused to be comforted, shuddering against him and begging to be taken home. He helped her outdoors, and in the open air she found relief in tears, his good right arm holding her close. And as she realized her need of him he felt surging through him his love for her, and then and there, on the path that led to her house he told her all that his heart had ached to express. Her tears ceased; but she did not draw away from his protecting arm. At the threshold of the house they paused.

"And you were the only one to think of coming for me!"

"I had to come—something made me. I had to come because I love you and have always loved you. Cordelia dear, you do care, don't you?"

"Oh, Jimmy, I'm so glad I was foolish and willful and went to that horrible house! I might never have known—just think, I might never have found out that you love me and that—and that I love you, Jimmy!"

Lillian Mary Wagner Expires Last Saturday

Lillian Mary Wagner, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wagner, of Vim died at 11 o'clock Saturday, Feb. 16, at the home of her maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Thomas, with whom the parents make their home. The child was an invalid almost since birth, and it was thought for some weeks that recovery was doubtful. Death came just 4 months and 12 days after the little one came into the world.

She was the great granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Engle of Vim. The paternal grandfather, Adam Wagner, and his two daughters and son-in-law, Mrs. James Clark and Mr. and Mrs. Albert Von Moose of Akron, Ohio, Mr. and Mrs. George Harding of Somerset, Mr. and Mrs. J. Andrew Engle and Hildebert Engle, of Frostburg, Md., were here to attend the funeral, which was held at the Thomas home, at 2 p. m., Monday, Rev. B. A. Black, of Amity Reformed Church officiating. Interment was in the Reformed cemetery, J. L. Tressler, undertaker in charge.

Our lovely bud, so young and fair. Called hence by early doom, Came to show how sweet these flowers, In Paradise would bloom.

E'er sin could harm, or sorrow fade, Death came with friendly care, The opening bud to heaven conveyed, And bid her blossom there.

Friend—This is your fourth daughter to get married, isn't it? MacLight—Ay, and our confetti's gettin' awful gritty!
